"The prospect of large financial goals and the hard work needed to achieve them can frighten even the most dedicated people. CCS helped us look both these challenges in the eye and overcome them. Their vision, hands-on guidance, and friendly but firm demeanor were the keys to an incredibly successful capital campaign. We come before the Lord 'With Grateful Hearts' for CCS and all they helped us accomplish!"

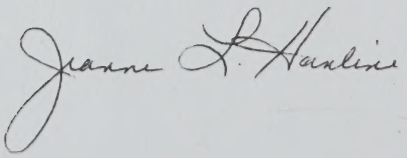
FOREWORD

It is with great pleasure that we present the 2010 Edition of The Official Catholic Directory. This book remains the premier resource for matters relating to the Catholic Church in the United States of America.



In addition to the voluminous facts and statistics regularly furnished in The Official Catholic Directory, this volume also includes a special retrospective on the first five years of Benedict XVI's papacy written by noted biographer George Weigel. There is also an overview of the five saints welcomed into the Catholic Church over the past year. Other articles focus on pilgrimage and sacred architecture, the effects of new media in the church, and the growth of the Catholic priesthood towards more effective leadership over the course of the Year for Priests.

With ongoing wars and the ravages of natural disasters, this has been a difficult time for America and the world. In light of current global events, we have included two new sections detailing the work of the Catholic Church as a major force for peace and good. These articles focus on the mission of priests within the U.S. Armed Forces, and the work of Catholic Charities bringing aid to Haiti and Chile in the wake of devastating earthquakes.

Along with Volume One, we have included The Official Catholic Directory, Part II in your subscription. Produced in the fall, the supplement contains updates and new listings not present in the main volume, along with the archdioceses and dioceses of the world reprinted with permission from the Vatican.

While we strive to produce a concise and accurate volume, nothing would have been accomplished without the help and cooperation of the many ecclesiastical authorities, diocesan officials, religious and laity who were instrumental in organizing the substantial amount of information needed to publish a successful directory. We would like to thank them all for their tireless work and invaluable assistance.

Sincerely,

Jeanne LoGiurato Hanline

"The eyes of all look hopefully to You; You give them their food in due season." (Psalm 145:15)

From providing emergency relief aid to Haiti after the devastating earthquake, to feeding and sheltering countless destitute families across the Caribbean and Latin America, Food For The Poor reaches out to help those in greatest need.

For 28 years, our ministry has provided lifesaving food, clean drinking water, basic shelter, medical assistance and more to those who often have nowhere else to turn. We also support orphanages, schools and homes for the elderly and handicapped.

Food For The Poor helps communities break the cycle of poverty by offering self-sustaining solutions that enable families to feed themselves and earn an income. Through our support of education and development projects, the areas we serve have hope for a better future.

We work with local clergy, churches, missionaries and others to provide desperately needed aid in the most efficient and cost-effective way possible. Our mission is to encourage the church of the First World to empower the church of the Third World in aiding our brothers and sisters there.

Food For The Poor is the largest international relief and development organization based in the U.S.* More than 96% of all donations received go directly to programs that help the poor. We continue to join with Catholic churches, here and abroad, in answering God's call to care for the destitute.

GUIDANCE IN GIVING, INC.

Full Service Stewardship, Development & Campaign Consultants

Fundraising is not just about raising money, it is about being stewards of the faith.

As a full-service Catholic organization involved solely with developing programs for parishes, dioceses and schools, we have the experience and expertise to design a successful Stewardship-based capital campaign for your parish.

Guidance In Giving, Inc. offers its parish clients full-service campaign direction that is customized to the needs of each community. The firm understands that today's pastor faces many challenges. The challenges involve not only meeting the spiritual needs of his parishioners, but also the temporal needs of his parish. By designing and implementing an organized campaign plan, Guidance In Giving, Inc. aims to effectively use the time of pastors, parish staff and lay leadership to achieve the maximum financial potential. Our full- time, on-site service alleviates the worry that is sometimes associated with a fundraising campaign and allows parish leadership to concentrate on its most important mission, that of serving its people.

In a successful Stewardship-based capital campaign, every Catholic family is challenged to give prayerfully and proportionately to the best of their financial ability over a period of three to five years. Each and every gift is vitally important, therefore a key element of the campaign is to provide everyone the opportunity to make a decision after they have learned about the parish's needs. The most effective manner of educating each parish family and raising the maximum amount of funds is through personal education and solicitation. These personal solicitations can be done via visitation as well as small and large group receptions. These are the most commonly employed and most successful methods of raising funds.

CHERISHING OUR COMMUNAL HERITAGE

SAINT BERNADETTE · St. Lucie West, FL

REVEREND VICTOR A. ULTO, PASTOR / RICK SWISHER ARCHITECT, INC.

Responding to the Pastor's desire to acquire heritage stained glass for his new church, Rambusch worked with the Boston Archdiocese Properties Service to procure seven rectangular windows from a closed parish in Cambridge, MA. Each 7'×3' window was disassembled, carefully cleaned, conserved and re-glazed. The few lost or broken areas were replicated exactly.

Now came the challenge! The fenestration in the apse had a Gothic arch-pointed top; the antique windows were rectilinear. Rambusch artists created an iconographical program of the seven sacraments for these new pointed-arch panels. They skillfully replicated the painting techniques and color palette of the antique windows so that the new and old are indistinguishable from each other.

Rambusch was honored to participate in this challenging, adaptive reuse of American Catholic artistic heritage – a "green" project seamlessly wedding our patrimony and future.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN NEARLY

1.8 MILLION MEN BELIEVE THEY CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE?

THEY ACTUALLY DO.

We are the Knights of Columbus. But we are more than just nearly 1.8 million members worldwide. We are mentors, leaders, and humanitarians. Last year, we volunteered over 68 million hours to help the needy and better our communities. We raised over $150 million for charities and local churches. At the same time, our $74 billion life insurance program* provides financial security to our members and their families. We are able to do these things not only because we believe we can make a difference, but because we know we can.

The Seal of P.J. Kenedy & Sons
The Official Catholic Directory

SIGNIFICANCE:

The shield is the central part of a heraldic device, which is more commonly known as a coat of arms. If that shield is enclosed within a body of text, or other type of surrounding configuration, the device becomes know as a seal, yet it is the shield portion of the design that is the most important, and that which is described technically as the blazon. As the design is examined, it must be remembered that by heraldic tradition the design is described (blazoned) as if being done by the bearer with the shield being worn on the arm. Therefore, the terms dexter and sinister will be reversed as the design is viewed from the front.

The shield of the seal for The Official Catholic Directory has been designed to reflect the character and heritage of this publication of P.J. Kenedy & Sons.

The shield is in two major portions. The right half (sinister impalement) is composed of the blue field on which are seen a silver tree, two candles (in silver or white) in their candleholders (of gold or yellow) and an open book, edged in gold and with a red bookmark. These symbols have been used over the years as the sign of the P.J. Kenedy and Sons publishing organization. These are the traditional symbols of knowledge and learning, so appropriate to a publisher.

The other side of the shield (the dexter impalement) is composed of a silver (white) field on which is seen a red cross, throughout, and a gold eagle. These symbols, combined with the field of the sinister impalement, are represented in the color of the flag of the United States of America and the eagle, the symbol of the United States. The cross represents Christianity and all of this combines to signify that The Official Catholic Directory annually reports on the Catholic Church in the United States.

The shield is surrounded by a laurel wreath of excellence and is enclosed within the legend that states the name of the company, the name of the publication and date (1817) of its founding.

The Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Springfield, Illinois was originally built in 1927 and inspired by the design of Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome. First, a rendering, then an onsite decorative sample was executed to illustrate the proposed colors, glazes, gilding and trompe l'oeil patterns, as well as, the restored scagliola columns. The Cathedral was a 2009 award recipient from the Painting and Decorating Contractors of America.

With a unified artistic vision, the Studios' experienced staff of artists and craftsmen provide a variety of disciplines to be a single source for all of a project's aesthetic needs. Ciaroscuro: Year in Review: 2009

By Karen A. Walker

The Communion Of Saints, illumination by Chicago-based artist Jed Gibbons. Commissioned by Our Sunday Visitor, Inc. Image: Artist Jed Gibbons. All rights reserved.

The year 2009 was one of contrasts. As in painting, where light shines brightest against the darkest background (in Italian, ciaroscuro), so seemed 2009.

The darkest hues included the continuance of widespread economic instability in the U.S. and globally, leading to increased job losses, home foreclosures and abrupt life changes. U.S. policy direction shifted radically to favor an increased disregard for the inestimable value of each human life, especially for the most vulnerable — the unborn, the frail and infirm, the elderly, the incapacitated, and the suffering. This included the lifting by executive order of long-standing U.S. protections against the unfettered experimentation of embryos. Mandated funding of abortion on demand and removal of conscience clauses became an integral part of unprecedented U.S. healthcare proposals and debate. Aggressive legislative and policy attacks against traditional family values, the most fundamental building block of society, took place in cities and in elementary schools across the U.S. An especially devastating earthquake killed thousands and completely disrupted community life in the capital of Haiti, with an even larger Chilean earthquake a month later. Increased threats of violence in the Middle East and elsewhere threatened civic peace and stability.

Yet amid the scuro of 2009, the radiant light of Christ illumined the darkest corners. It took place mostly in hidden ways, and in hidden hearts, which the public will never know. But there were vivid, bold rays of light as well, signs of hope amid suffering.

These bold illuminating rays of 2009 include remarkable feats of heroism such as Captain Sully's landing of a packed airliner in the Hudson River shortly after take-off. Certainly the lives of those passengers and flight crew were unalterably changed! In Rome, Pope Benedict XVI declared A Year for Priests. He released a new and robust social encyclical Caritas in Veritate, and opened wide the doors of welcome to Anglican dioceses and communities wishing to enter into full communion with the Church of Rome. Both Pope John Paul II and Pope Pius XII were declared Venerable. Pope Benedict made an historic and memorable Pilgrimage to the Holy Land and also met with artists in the Sistine Chapel, inviting them to embark on a special mission of beauty.

Additionally, a new trend just beginning to surface in the U.S. may be of particular interest to the Church, namely, a new level of lay-driven support for priests and vocations.

Below are snapshots of some of these rays of light from 2009, with special emphasis on one, just-under-the-radar emerging trend in the U.S.

Chiaro Snapshots:

- Pope Benedict XVI's Apostolic Constitution Anglicanorum Coetibus (Groups of Anglicans) welcomes Anglican dioceses and communities who wish to enter into full communion with the Roman Catholic Church by establishing Personal Ordinariates, as needed, and in effect creating an Anglican Rite. An historic moment, nearly 500 years after King Henry III first established The Church of England in 1534.

"When Evening Comes and Work is Done." Illumination: Jed Gibbons. Commissioned by the Pontifical College Josephinum. Image: Jed Gibbons. All rights reserved.

- Pope Benedict's new social encyclical Caritas in Veritate builds on the social principles laid out by his predecessors in Rerum Novarum, Populorum Progressio, Centesimus Annus, and others. It lays out a litmus test against which one can evaluate organizations, movements, public or economic policy and more. The Pope underscores that man is a creature, made in God's image, whose ultimate fulfillment is found only in God, and therefore any enterprise (political, social, economic) that involves people must give primacy to individual human dignity and value. Any system that does not respect this primacy is, the encyclical states, doomed to cause harm instead of good.

- Pope Benedict's historic pilgrimage to Jerusalem and the Holy Land in May 2009 included an abundant and generous welcome from leaders and citizens, as well as meetings with Israeli and Palestinian Authority top officials, and with the top religious leaders from the Jewish, Muslim and Christian faiths. The visit bolstered the spirits of Christians in the region, especially Catholics, and did much to further respectful dialog and underscore commonly shared beliefs and desires among the three top religious groups co-existing in the region.

- Pope Benedict invited 500 Artists from around the world for a special meeting in the Sistine Chapel – 250 artists attended, including some of international fame. The Holy Father urged them to inject spirituality into their work, saying that beauty can become "a path toward the transcendent, toward the ultimate Mystery, toward God," and contrasting this with: "Too often…the beauty thrust upon us is illusory and deceitful …it imprisons man within himself and further enslaves him, depriving him of hope and joy."

An emerging trend in the U.S.:

Lay-driven support for priests. The Serra Club, founded in 1934 and named after Spanish missionary Blessed Junipero Serra, "to foster, affirm and promote vocations to ministry in the Catholic Church," remains today one of the most prayerful and practical lay-driven priest and vocation support organizations in the U.S. and in the world. Yet in 2009, several new lay ministries and outreaches, and one intensive leadership training program, point to an emerging trend of lay-led support for priests.

In each of these new ventures, lay founders drew from professional expertise to address festering "occupational challenges" inherent in today's priestly responsibilities.

Good Leaders, Good Shepherds program of the Catholic Leadership Institute (www.CatholicLeaders.org): Clearly at the helm of the new trend toward lay-initiated support for priests, especially in terms of its goals, content, impact and results, this program has been more than five years in development. In 2009, the first 600 graduates emerged from the institute's unique, two-year leadership curriculum for priests. Current enrollment includes an additional 600 priests and 36 bishops, representing a total of 44 dioceses. By the end of 2010, Fr. Bill Dickinson, National Director of Leadership Development for the Catholic Leadership Institute, estimates that more than one-third of the dioceses in the U.S. will have had, or will be enrolled in, the two-year Good Leaders, Good Shepherds program.

"Our mission is to help priests recognize their God-given potential and develop their leadership skills so they can effectively and confidently lead their faith communities in carrying out the mission of Jesus Christ and the Catholic Church," says Fr. Bill Dickinson.

"In the priesthood there are three offices that come with ordination," Fr. Dickinson explains, "to teach, to sanctify and to govern. We made a choice with this program to support the governing office because it's the leadership component and very little is done to support it."

"We have a different program for bishops," says Fr. Dickinson, adding that four bishops have opted instead to go through the priest program with their priests. There is a supporting lay version of the curriculum, accessible only to graduate priests who may choose and recommend key lay associates to attend.

The development of this program, built from the ground-up with priests in mind, underscores the new trend to put lay expertise at the service of the priests.

Dick Lyles, CEO of a global consulting firm, Leadership Legacies, CEO of a Hollywood film-making company, Origin Entertainment, host of The Catholic Business Hour, and author or co-author of more than eight business and leadership books, has literally traveled the world delivering management consulting and training to companies such as Pfizer, Hughes Aircraft, Exxon, Wendy's, the New Zealand Dairy Board, Ericsson, and many others. He is the principal developer of the Good Leaders, Good Shepherd curriculum, and of its accompanying book with the same title.

Using Jesus Christ as the ultimate shepherd and model of leadership, Mr. Lyles explains, the curriculum for clergy was specifically designed to help priests overcome the challenges today of a diminishing number of clergy and more complex circumstances for priestly ministry.

The goal is to minimize the frustration and energy spent on their administrative roles and maximize the joy and time spent on the pastoral duties for which they were uniquely ordained. The impact will be more holy, healthy, and happy shepherds of vibrant parish communities, leading more people to a deeper relationship with Christ.

"The results are truly transformative for priests and parishes," says Mr. Lyles. "We didn't just take a business model and give it a priestly focus. Instead, we developed this program from the ground up to meet the unique demands, challenges and responsibilities of a priest, especially a parish priest. That involved a lot of first-hand research with priests and pastors."

Because the institute's program heralds this new trend, it has been operating enough so that the impact on priests and parishes is more evident than other initiatives. Of all the feedback gathered, perhaps the most significant were the reactions of priests in the first classes.

"In every class I taught, especially at the end of the first module, I'd have a few priests come up to me with tears in their eyes, saying they couldn't believe that someone cared enough about them to put together a program of this caliber and quality. Every class was like that," said Mr. Lyles, who was heavily involved in training during the first years of the program. "One priest told me that he used to walk down the street as a priest and everyone would say 'hi,' welcome him and be positive. But now he walks down the street and people turn away! ...Another priest told me, again with tears in his eyes, that this curriculum has changed his whole attitude about himself, just to know someone cared this much about him.... I heard so many comments from priests like this; 'You can't imagine what it means to me that someone would put something like this together for me, for priests!' 'Thank you for putting something together of this quality to help me be better in what I do.'"

Interviewed priests concur:

Fr. Brian Smith, from the Archdiocese of Boston, is Parochial Vicar at St. Edith Stein Parish. He says, "I would tell any priest, 'You need it more than you think; you'll benefit from Good Leaders, Good Shepherds in ways you cannot imagine...the objectivity it brings is literally invaluable."

"I feel that I am better able to read and relate to people, and that I have a system to better understand where others are coming from," agreed Fr. Michael Phillippino, a pastor from the Diocese of Norwich. "The program gives me a greater advantage in being a more effective priest and evangelizer."

"I found GLGS to be a high level program which takes seriously God's call for priests to act responsibly as leaders. If leading souls to Christ is the call of the priest, then GLGS provides a way to do this with confidence and competence...Leadership skill building founded on a solid understanding of one's own behavior, and that of others, is a great contribution," says Fr. Bill Kelly, Director, Clergy Support Office, for the Archdiocese of Boston.

In the words of one lay person in California who wished to remain anonymous, "Imagine the transformative effect of this leadership training on parishioners and parish communities, in a myriad of parishes nationwide, whose pastors begin to lead their flocks with confidence, clarity of vision and joy in his uniquely priestly ministry." "Hopefully," adds Mr. Lyles, "this is the beginning of an effort by lay people who will rise up to support their priests in tangible ways."

The same year that Catholic Leadership Institute celebrated its first priest graduation class, a handful of other developments echo this trend of lay persons formalizing their professional expertise at the service of priests.

VocationBoom.org is an interactive website with multiple resources for men who are discerning a priestly vocation. Although formally launched in 2009, it is the fruit of more than 20 years of prayer and deliberation. The initiative was founded by Jerry Usher, a pioneer of the recent growth in Catholic Radio over the past decade, and also a young man who spent time discerning his own vocation, especially during a time of priestly formation from 1989 to 1995. VocationBoom.org, with its energy and functionality, clearly reflects full use of this era's new media tools, with easy opportunities for users to connect via blog comments, Twitter, FaceBook and YouTube. The site also is new in its approach. It reflects the vantage point of a person searching, and leads with the kinds of questions and curiosity of today's young man. And it does so in a warm, inviting and simple way; it speaks his language.

Among the website's opportunities to share experiences and questions, a user will find first-hand examples and true stories of others discerning the same vocation. Likewise, there are links to vocation directors, church teachings, the next steps along the discernment process, and much more. In short, a young man seeking to determine his vocation to the priesthood would feel he is not alone in the journey.

"We're building a culture that's open to the priesthood, clearing the path to discovery, and unlocking hearts and minds to God's call," says Mr. Usher, whose site is not limited by locality or priestly options (religious order, diocesan, etc.)

Although spearheaded by Mr. Usher, development of the site and its growing set of tools and resources have been two years in development with the founder's colleagues. As he puts it: "Pope Benedict XVI's recent proclamation of The Year for Priests is a confirmation of our intentions and an indication that now is the time to unveil Vocation Boom!"

VocationBoom!com
Here I am.

Vocation Boom is a team of passionate advocates dedicated to supporting the priesthood as a life's vocation and mission. www.vocationboom.com

EncouragePriests.org. A third initiative, still in its infancy, was just launched in April 2010 by Tom Peterson, founder of Catholics Come Home (www.CatholicsComeHome.org), a nonprofit media apostolate dedicated to producing and airing television ads encouraging Catholics to "come home" to the Church if they have been away. EncouragePriests.org is a communications outreach of Catholics Come Home, Inc. According to the website, its mission is "to encourage priests, and promote priestly vocations through our love and prayers." Television commercials that showcase the humanitarian efforts of priests are slated to begin production and airing in the near future. By June 2010, the organization plans to launch an improved, interactive website enabling Catholics to offer spiritual bouquets, e-cards, printable greeting cards, video messages and blogs with "kind words of gratitude to show appreciation for countless priests around the world."

"Countless priests deserve our true gratitude and love, as so many lead sacrificial and humble lives," says Mr. Peterson, the former CEO of an advertising agency in Phoenix. "These noble men of God need our encouragement and could be uplifted by a simple prayer and a gentle word of appreciation from us."

These lay-driven initiatives indirectly follow on the heels of scattered prayer initiatives for priests and one particularly notable ministry to priests in crisis called Opus Bono Sacerdotii, Work for the Good of the Priesthood, (www.OpusBono.com).

"We've helped about 5,000 priests in crisis in the last eight years," says Opus Bono Sacerdotii founder Joe Maher, a former turnaround CEO who launched his career in the Hollywood entertainment industry and segued to Fortune 500 companies by request. Several years after he relocated his family to the Midwest a local priest was in crisis and needed help. Mr. Maher applied his professional expertise to the situation and his nonprofit apostolate grew from there, ultimately demanding his full commitment.

"We still deal with thousands of priests," Mr. Maher adds. "We work as quietly as we can, since everything we do with a priest is confidential. We now get about a call a day."

Although radically different in its focus from the goals of those groups comprising the emerging trend, Opus Bono Sacerdotii nonetheless exemplifies professional lay expertise brought to the service of priests and the priesthood.

Where this emerging trend will lead is anyone's guess, but the impact is already quietly seeping into parishes nationwide. ◆

Pope Benedict XVI:
The First Five Years

By George Weigel

When Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger was elected the 265th Bishop of Rome on April 19, 2005, he brought to the papacy decades of work as one of Christianity's foremost theologians, and more than twenty years experience in the Church's central administration where he had served as prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith [CDF] since his 1981 appointment by John Paul II.

Ratzinger and the man he would succeed as pope formed a unique intellectual partnership for twenty-three years: Ratzinger the theologian and John Paul the philosopher, both men of the Second Vatican Council, had worked in close harness to forge an authoritative interpretation of the Council's work in preparation for the third millennium of Christian history. Ratzinger's election, after one of the shortest conclaves in history, was an expression of the "consensus of esteem" that had quickly formed around him as the "elder brother who stood head and shoulders above the rest," as one cardinal-elector put it. His election also emphasized the cardinals' intention to underscore that John Paul's historic pontificate had not been idiosyncratic, but had set the Church's course for the 21st century and beyond.

Joseph Ratzinger's choice of papal name, "Benedict," reflected the Church's commitment to sanctity – which, Ratzinger and John Paul II believed, was every baptized person's Christian and human destiny. By also evoking the memory of the great founder whose monks saved the civilization of the West, Benedict XVI was also signaling his commitment to the reconversion of Europe, Christianity's historic heartland, which he believed to be suffering from a deep spiritual malaise with grave social consequences.

Elected pope three days after his 78th birthday, Benedict XVI, a shy and retiring personality who had nonetheless displayed an ability to lead millions in prayer during John Paul II's funeral, could not anticipate a pontificate extending over decades. Thus his personal circumstances, his intellectual and pastoral inclinations, and his readings of the signs of the times, especially in Europe, produced a papacy whose first five years called the Church back to the fundamentals of its common life: the universal call to sanctity, the path which the Church discovers in the scriptural word of God, its rich patristic theological heritage, and above all a personal friendship with Jesus Christ, a frequent theme of Benedict's homilies and audience addresses.

Magisterium. While Benedict XVI's papal teaching reflected his remarkably broad and deep learning, it also displayed Joseph Ratzinger's striking ability to explain the densest and most challenging of Christian doctrines in language the theologically untutored could understand. This gift, which Ratzinger had honed in his career as a university professor, was powerfully displayed in his Wednesday general audiences, whose themes reflected his commitment to bringing the world Church into a closer encounter with its roots. In 2005, Benedict picked up the thematic thread of John Paul II's last audiences and continued the late pope's explanation of the psalms and canticles of Vespers, the Church's evening prayer and, in a sense, the primary "hymnbook" of the Catholic Church. Then, in 2006, Benedict turned his attention to the cornerstones on which historic Christianity rests: the apostles, whose personal friendship with Jesus Christ had so transformed their lives that they were compelled to bring the Gospel to the ends of the world they knew. In 2007, Benedict gave a series of audience addresses on figures from the Acts of the Apostles, proceeding directly from there to a multi-year reflection on the eastern and western Fathers of the Church: the men who had turned Christian confession and proclamation into creeds and dogma. The Pope's explication of the thoughts of these early theologians was interrupted in 2008-2009 for a year of reflections on St. Paul, during the Pauline Year the Pope had proclaimed. Benedict returned to the Fathers and then began an explanation of the medieval theological reformers in his late 2009 and early 2010 audiences. These luminously clear catechetical talks often drew large crowds of pilgrims to St. Peter's Square or the Paul VI Audience Hall, and several sets of the addresses were published as books.

Benedict XVI issued three encyclicals in the first five years of his pontificate. Deus Caritas Est [God Is Love], was signed on Christmas 2005 and released publicly the following month. In addition to offering a theological exploration of the various meanings of love, the Pope taught that the service of charity is part of the "fundamental structure of the Church," along with the sacraments and the proclamation of God's word. The encyclical also reminded the world that no political system would ever embody justice so fully that there would no longer be a need for love. "There is no ordering of the state so just that it will eliminate the need for love," Benedict wrote; "the state which would provide everything, absorbing everything into itself, would ultimately become a mere bureaucracy incapable of guaranteeing the very thing...every person needs: namely, loving personal concern."

Spe Salvi [Saved in Hope], signed on November 30, 2007, took its title from the letter to the Romans and taught that hope is faith oriented toward the future, thus radically changing the present. Spe Salvi urged the post-modern world to consider the possibility – indeed the likelihood – that its great achievements could not endure without a firm grounding in biblical faith and Christian humanism: both of which, Joseph Ratzinger had long been convinced, were crucial building blocks of a genuinely humane civilization.

Caritas in Veritate [Charity in Truth] was signed on June 29, 2009 and evoked the memory of Paul VI's social encyclical, Populorum Progressio [The Progress of Peoples], while urging political leaders, economists, and the peoples of the Church to explore what some analysts called an "economy of communion," marked by enlarged philanthropy and new methods of measuring value.

Liturgy. Another significant document of Benedict XVI's magisterium was the 2007 post-synodal apostolic exhortation, Sacramentum Caritatis [The Sacrament of Charity], written to complete the work of the 2005 Synod of Bishops, which marked the end of the "Year of the Eucharist" initiated by John Paul II. Throughout his decades as a priest, Joseph Ratzinger, who had been deeply influenced by the mid-century liturgical reform movement in Germany, had emphasized that the liturgy, and especially the Eucharistic liturgy, was the vital center of the Church's life. At his election it was no secret that Ratzinger believed that the implementation of Vatican II's liturgical reforms had not produced the results anticipated, and that a "reform of the reform" was required. Sacramentum Caritatis set the theological foundation for such a further reform of the Church's public worship, which the Pope also tried to accelerate by the 2007 apostolic letter Summorum Pontificum, which allowed for the universal use of the Roman Missal as reformed by Blessed John XXIII in 1962. Although interpreted by some as an effort to roll back the liturgical reforms of the Council, Summorum Pontificum was in fact meant to draw the "reform of the reform" in the direction of a resacralization of the liturgy while providing for the pastoral needs of those who had found it difficult to adjust to the 1970 Missal of Paul VI.

Summorum Pontificum was also a papal gesture toward those Catholics who, because of their devotion to the older liturgy, had separated themselves from full communion with the Church by following the French archbishop Marcel Lefebvre into schism in 1988. In early 2009 the Pope announced a new initiative aimed at reconciling the late French prelate's remaining followers but this effort quickly encountered difficulties when it was revealed that Richard Williamson, one of the bishops Lefebvre had illicitly ordained and whose automatic excommunication Benedict XVI had lifted, was a Holocaust-denier. In the wake of the ensuing international controversy, the Pope moved the Ecclesia Dei Commission, established by John Paul II as a vehicle for reconciling Lefebvrists who wished to return to full communion with Rome, under the authority of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

Apostolic Journeys. In the first half-decade of the pontificate, Benedict XVI's pilgrimages to the world Church were focused primarily on Europe. Shortly after his election he returned to his native land to preside over World Youth Day 2005 in Cologne. His May 2006 visit to Poland was an expression of gratitude to the Polish people for having given the Church, John Paul II (whose beatification cause Benedict had started before the normal five-year waiting period was over). The Pope's travels to Spain in July 2006 for the fifth World Meeting of Families, to Austria in September 2007, to France in September 2008, and to the Czech Republic in September 2009 were all intended to call Europe back to its Christian roots as aggressive secularism continued to dominate both European high culture and the institutions of the European Union.

The Pope's second visit to Germany in September 2006 created the first media firestorm of the pontificate when, in a lecture at his old university in Regensburg, Benedict XVI challenged Islam to face its difficulties in accommodating itself to the idea of religious freedom as a universal human right that can be known by reason, and to the separation of religious and political authority in the modern state. Global controversy followed, but the net result of the Regensburg Lecture was that Islamic scholars and religious authorities requested a new dialogue with the Holy See – a dialogue which, in his Christmas 2006 address to the Roman Curia, the Pope insisted must focus on the two crucial issues he had identified at Regensburg.

Benedict XVI visited Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew of Constantinople in late 2006, addressed the fifth general conference of Latin American and Caribbean bishops' conferences in Brazil in May 2007, flew around the world to Sydney, Australia for World Youth Day in July 2008, made a week-long visit to Cameroon and Angola in March 2009, and embarked on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land in May 2009. The last must have been an emotional moment for Joseph Ratzinger, who has done more than perhaps any other Catholic theologian to remind the Church of its debt to living Judaism, and who had now, as Bishop of Rome and successor of Peter, come on pilgrimage in the lands where Jesus and his followers had walked.

Benedict XVI addressed the General Assembly of the United Nations in April 2008, proposing that human rights, "the common language and the ethical substratum of international relations," are based on "the natural law inscribed on human hearts and present in different cultures and civilizations." The U.N. address was also the occasion for a pastoral visit to New York and Washington, during which the Pope received a tremendous welcome on the South Lawn of the White House and preached a memorable homily at St. Patrick's in New York, using the cathedral's stained glass and stone as a metaphor for the reality of the Church. In a surprise gesture of apology and reconciliation, Benedict XVI met in Washington with victims of clerical sexual abuse.

After Five Years. At CDF, Joseph Ratzinger dealt firmly with abusive clergy, but sex abuse scandals throughout the Catholic world plagued the Pope as his first five years in office came to a close. In March 2010, he wrote a stern letter to the Church in Ireland, condemning both the sexual and physical abuse of the young by priests and religious in past decades, and the cravenness of Irish bishops in handling this scandal; the letter seemed to presage major changes in Church leadership there. Early in the pontificate, Benedict had dealt firmly with Father Marcial Maciel, founder of the Legionaries of Christ, convinced that charges of abuse against Maciel which Joseph Ratzinger had ordered investigated had been substantiated. Yet amidst scandals that could not have been anything other than acutely painful to bear, the Pope soldiered on, finishing work in early 2010 on the second volume of his book on Jesus; the first volume, Jesus of Nazareth, had been published in 2007 and was an international bestseller.

Five years after his election, it seemed unlikely that Benedict would undertake the thoroughgoing reform of the Roman Curia for which some had hoped in 2005. Curial incompetence had cost the Pope dearly in the Williamson affair; there was little effective Vatican response to attacks on Benedict after his Regensburg lecture; the 2009 presentation of the Pope's decision to create "personal ordinariates" for groups of Anglicans wishing full communion with Rome was poorly handled, with groundless charges of papal "poaching" inevitably following; the president of the Pontifical Academy of Life misstated the Church's teaching on abortion on the front page of L'Osservatore Romano. Yet belying the media caricature of him as a stiff disciplinarian, Benedict XVI most often gave those who ill-served him opportunities to do better. Whether such generosity impeded the effective communication of the pontificate's main themes was being actively discussed around the world as the Pope's fifth anniversary approached.

In the first five years of his pontificate, Benedict XVI had shown himself a man of gentleness and courtesy, a compelling preacher and catechist, a priest of deep piety and great personal sanctity, and a man with a unique capacity to put difficult issues on the world agenda. It will be for another pope, it would seem, to repair the broken machinery of curial governance. Meanwhile, Catholics around the world know they have a shepherd who is a master teacher, for whom friendship with Jesus Christ is at the center of Christian discipleship. ◆

The Face of Love

Catholic response to two devastating quakes that rocked Haiti and Chile

By Karen A. Walker

Close to 50,000 Haitians now call the golf course at the Petionville Club home. CRS is distributing lentils, vegetable oil, and bulgar to those living at the camp. The camp now includes a market, make-shift beauty salons, and a place to make international phone calls. Photo by Lane Hartill/Catholic Relief Services.

"A 7.0 earthquake struck the capital of Haiti today," read news and wire reports circling the globe. A compact, clinical description...until one sees the YouTube videos, listens to first-hand accounts and takes in the ensuing chaos, the cries of anguish, pain, loss and confusion....until one sees the make-shift Petionville camp that quickly swelled to more than 50,000 displaced men, women, and children who chose to sleep and set up temporary quarters on the third hole of a once-swanky golf course in the open air rather than inside a building... until one sees the local and imported doctors and nurses, many local medical professionals still stunned and grieving the loss of medical colleagues, yet all performing triage, amputations and surgery amid the rubble of collapsed and severely damaged hospitals and in makeshift tents.

In 35 to 40 seconds of terror—only 35 seconds—lives changed forever in Haiti, and around the world for those in solidarity with their suffering brothers and sisters.

In less than one minute, Haitians in and around the nation's capital of Port-au-Prince had lost their beloved Archbishop Joseph Serge Miot and more than 97 seminarians, as well as popular sports figures and musicians, and at least 85 United Nations personnel, including Mission Chief Hedi Annabi. And in less than one minute more, Catholic Relief Services (CRS) staff, already present in Haiti, began planning their relief efforts.

Entire buildings—including the Cathedral of Port-au-Prince, the National Palace, the Archbishop's residence, the National Major Seminary of Notre Dame of Haiti (the only major seminary in the country), many Catholic schools throughout the region, hospitals and government offices—had collapsed in a plume of dust that rose and then engulfed the city for nearly 20 minutes; leaving hundreds trapped, or worse, in the rubble. Between 92,000 and 230,000 are dead. An accurate death toll may never be known, with mass graves hastily dug to clear unsanitary decay and stench accelerated by the tropical heat. It was a race against time. Survivors, the trapped and injured needed immediate attention to survive. The removal of rubble and debris blocking roads, repairs to the region's main airport and control tower, and fixing damaged ports were key to avoid further hampering of aid delivery.

As of mid-March, more than 52 subsequent aftershocks greater than 4.5 had rocked the region.

And then Chile…

A little more than a month after Haiti's monster quake, on February 27, 2010, 3:34 am local time, in the black of early morning, in a country more than 3,500 miles from Haiti, an 8.8 quake lasting only 90 terrifying seconds struck off the coast of the Maule region of Chile. Eighty percent of the country's population felt the quake, as did cities in neighboring Argentina and in southern Peru. A blackout affected 93% of Chile's population, lasting in some places for days. A quake-triggered tsunami devastated several coastal towns in south-central Chile and damaged the port at Talcahuano.

By early March, more than 130 aftershocks had been registered, including 13 above 6.0 on the Richter scale.

Chile's earthquake was 500 times more forceful than Haiti's January quake, yet needs differed radically in the two countries.

Priorities change. Immediately.

CRS workers know the drill. After any disaster, it's impossible to know the extent of damages and human needs, so immediate assessment and planning begin simultaneously. Certain needs are primary—food, sanitation, personal safety and shelter.

"When an earthquake [or any major disaster] strikes," says CRS president Ken Hackett, a 38-year CRS veteran, "we have a set of professionals with various areas of expertise such as logisticians, engineers, shelter, sanitation and water experts, who are accustomed to designing effective disaster response.

"We bring these experts in from around the world to design an immediate and a long-term response to the disaster. They use computers, on-the-ground assessments, and, most importantly, the lessons learned from responding to many other disasters in other parts of the world.... Within hours of the Haitian quake a message had already been sent to these experts, saying: 'Get ready, you're coming to Haiti!'... Some arrived in two or three days, others later. We stagger their arrival and departure so that no one burns out."

But CRS began offering aid even before the special technicians arrived.

"We've had an operational presence in Haiti for 55 years," explains Mr. Hackett, "so we have people, compassion, experience and connections that are long-standing, robust, effective and agile. We were able to get moving quickly. We had supplies in place and people to move those supplies, systems to account for them, and to distribute them effectively."

CRS does not work alone in a major disaster, isolated from other charities or government response teams.

Part of a bigger picture

Catholic Relief Service is the official international outreach of Catholics in the United States to their brothers and sisters—whether Catholic or not—who are in dire need throughout the world. The organization was founded by the bishops of the United States in 1943, during World War II, initially to help Europe and its refugees recover from the ravages of war. As the postwar situation improved, the agency turned its attention to other people and places in need of assistance, opening offices in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Staff for Catholic Relief Services unload hygiene kits that were packed in the Dominican Republic. The kit includes items such as soap, toothpaste, mosquito nets, toothbrushes, and towels. Nine hundred and sixty eight kits were delivered to the CRS warehouse in Port-au-Prince, in addition to plastic sheeting for shelter, and food kits.

This programming was in response to the 7.0 magnitude earthquake that struck Haiti on Tuesday, January 12, 2010. The earthquake killed and injured thousands of people, primarily the capital, Port-au-Prince. Photo by Lane Hartill/Catholic Relief Services.

"Today we work in 100 countries around the world," says Michael Wiest, a 35-year veteran who began his CRS career at age 24 working in Africa and now serves as the organization's Vice President of Giving and Awareness. "We have about 55 offices overseas in 9 regions... We're part of the Church in the United States, owned by the bishops of the U.S., and mandated to serve the poor of the world on behalf of U.S. Catholics."

CRS, which serves people in need outside the U.S., and Catholic Charities USA, which serves people in need within the United States, are together considered to be Caritas USA and a member of Caritas International. Caritas International is the umbrella federation consisting of 167 Caritas agencies, which are the bishop-run charitable organizations from each country, i.e. Caritas Brazil, Caritas Canada, Caritas Germany, and Caritas United Kingdom.

"Of all Caritas member organizations," notes Mr. Wiest, "CRS is larger than all the others combined. In terms of operational presence we have about 5,000 staff around the world. So when major disaster strikes, typically CRS can carry the heaviest load in a location. We work together."

"Historical realities of each Caritas agency are different," adds Mr. Wiest. "The size of resources varies, as does cultural background. The tradition of private giving is more developed in the U.S. Interestingly, U.S. Catholics give more than twice per capita than the second most philanthropic nation, the United Kingdom."

In fulfillment of is mission, CRS does more than respond to emergency situations. It helps rebuild societies in need through community-based, sustainable development initiatives. Its programs today include agricultural initiatives, community banks, health education, micro-financing and clean water projects, all of which are developed in a way which ensures that the local population is the central participant in its own development, and that a project can be sustained through the effort and resources of the local community.

In its more than half a century of relief work, CRS has handled a wide range of disasters—from the aftermath of devastating hurricanes or societal instability during intense civil strife, to the psychological and physical destruction left in the wake of the December 26, 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami.

Response and needs different in Chile

The Chilean bishops' Caritas Chile, which CRS developed for the bishops years ago, is now the strongest and most developed Catholic relief organization among Latin American countries. "They were able to walk in quickly and respond to the earthquake disaster with a lot of technical expertise," explains Mr. Hackett. CRS does not have an office in Chile. It is not needed. "Caritas Chile requested two specialty technicians from us, whom we sent down, and they are appreciative of any funds we can send their way.... While no less of an emergency situation, the need is different than in Haiti."

Overall, about $400,000 to $500,000 is anticipated for CRS relief efforts in Chile, whereas more than $170 million is projected for Haiti.

Hope, Courage and Light in the Darkness

Back in Haiti, a country estimated to be 80% Catholic, there's an unexpected note found throughout the makeshift camps. Singing. Heartfelt singing.

"In the camps, the religious spirit of the people was quite noticeable," blogs Cardinal Sean Patrick O'Malley, OFM Cap, Cardinal of the Boston Archdiocese, regarding his early March 2010 trip as part of a U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) committee to assess the needs of the Church in Haiti.

CRS sent technical support to Caritas Chile to help in the relief effort. Photo by Holly Inurreta/Catholic Relief Services

"They would sing religious hymns for hours every night. Everyone talked about how, in the refugee camps, you'd hear people singing hymns all night long."

The Cardinal and his group spent considerable time touring the area with Archbishop Barnardito Auza, apostolic nuncio to Haiti. They brought vestments for priests who had none. By the time of his visit, more than half a million refugees had gone to other provinces of Haiti, with CRS paying for tuition and food for children attending Catholic schools in these provinces.

And there are so many other lights...

"Working side-by-side, CRS and the hospital team pulled mattresses and bed frames from the debris, tunneled out medical supplies, pieced together three operating rooms and sectioned off several outdoor "wards" for patient recovery," reports Sara Fajarado, a CRS communications officer in Haiti.

"Each day the number of surgeries performed at the hospital grows. Wounds are dressed. Antibiotics are dispensed. Charts are dutifully monitored. The St. Francois nursing staff has returned and once again provides 24-hour care. Doctors from Baltimore and CRS work alongside residents, medical students and seasoned Haitian doctors. Signs handwritten in permanent marker direct visitors: the pharmacy, the in-patient clinic, and the pediatric ward. This small touch adds an air of formality to a place ransacked by nature.

"But it's the quiet yet dignified resiliency of the patients that stands out. For a place overrun with the bandaged and amputated, no one complains. They are close enough to one another to hear every sound made by their fellow patients, and yet it's as quiet here as a private room. Patients take comfort in their loved ones and allow the healing to begin."

The most important thing...

Woven into the fabric of CRS relief efforts—the response of the faithful throughout the United States to the needs of most recent overseas disaster victims—a deeper, distinctively Catholic principle is at work than mere humanitarian aid.

"The ministry of charity is as essential to our ministry as Catholics as are the Sacraments," says Mr. Wiest. "The ministry of charity is as much a part of parish life in the United States and elsewhere as are other facets of parish life that might be more immediately visible. It's integral to our life as Catholics. As the Pope says in his first encyclical, Deus Caritas Est, "the ministry of charity is not extra-curricular. It is essential to our lives as Catholics."

"The passion that drives me," echoes Mr. Hackett, "is knowing that you can positively impact millions of peoples' lives. If you do your work correctly, lives can be transformed....it's a good thing to do, to positively improve people's lives in a sustainable way."

"...the exercise of charity is an action of the Church as such, and...like the ministry of Word and Sacrament, it too has been an essential part of her mission from the very beginning," instructs Pope Benedict XVI in Deus Caritas Est.

The face of love is the true face of all Catholics, no matter what their circumstances. As Michael Hill, CRS

Chairman of Catholic Relief Services' board, Archbishop of New York Timothy Dolan, right, greets fellow clergy prior to the funeral of Archbishop Joseph Serge Miot and Vicar Charles Benoit, on Saturday, January 23, 2010, in the courtyard of the Notre Dame Cathedral in Port-au-Prince Haiti. The two died as a result of the 7.0 magnitude earthquake that ravaged the Haitian capital. The cathedral collapsed and buried 4 o'clock worshippers in its rubble. In addition to Archbishop Dolan who represented the USCCB and Catholic Relief Services, Bishop Thomas Wenski of Orlando and CRS President, Ken Hackett were also in attendance. Mr. Hackett said of the ceremonies, "It was necessary for all those people there because he (Archbishop Miot) meant a lot to the people there. It was symbolic to have (the ceremony) in the courtyard of the damaged cathedral. This ceremony will help Haitians in their grieving process." Photo by Sara A. Fajardo/Catholic Relief Services.

communications officer for sub-Saharan Africa, based in Baltimore, reports: "During a three-day period of prayer beginning February 12, Haitians across the country took time to observe the one-month marker. Singing could be heard across the city, coming from formal and makeshift churches, from camps and settlements, from people walking to and from prayer services, and even from the CRS offices where a handful of Haitian staff members worked over the weekend."

The work has only begun. Love persists. Writes Mr. Hill: "Now attention is turning to providing shelter as the rainy season looms a month or so away."

Called to Serve Catholics in the Military

An interview with Archbishop Timothy Broglio and those who serve with him

By Karen A. Walker

Archdiocesan Shield: The coat of arms of the Archdiocese for the Military Services is divided into three sections, one in red, one in silver or white, and one in blue--the traditional colors of the United States. In the uppermost portion, there is an American Bald Eagle holding in each claw the universal symbol of peace, a green olive branch. In the middle portion, there is a silver cross on the outline meridians of the earth. In the lowest, the red portion of these arms, are the gold and silver crossed keys of Saint Peter, the symbol of the Holy See. The composition of the arms conveys the message and mission of the Archdiocese for the Military Services--to Americans carrying peace; to carry Christ all over the world; and to act as a liaison for the United States and the Holy See.

Archbishop Timothy Broglio was installed as the fourth Archbishop of the Military Services, USA, on January 25, 2008. He leads America's only diocese without borders, the Archdiocese for Military Services, USA (AMS). Based out of Washington DC, Archbishop Broglio is charged with the spiritual well-being of U.S. military personnel stationed around the world. In March 2010, The Official Catholic Directory interviewed Archbishop Broglio regarding this unique archdiocese, its function and operation, its chaplains, vocations, and the breadth of individuals it serves. In addition to the archbishop's interview, several chaplains and a seminarian studying in Rome offer further insights from their varied perspectives.

Q. Archbishop Broglio, what is the unique function of the Archdiocese for the Military Services?

A. The Archdiocese for the Military Services, USA (hereafter AMS) differs from all others in that one is a member not by where he resides, but by the position he or she occupies. Subjects or faithful of the AMS are all Catholic active duty military of the five branches [U.S. Army, U.S. Air Force, U.S. Navy, U.S. Marine Corps, and U.S. Coast Guard] and their immediate family members and dependents or family residing with them, Catholics in the four Military Academies and the Merchant Marine Academy, patients in Veterans' Administration facilities and any personnel of those facilities who reside in them, any Catholic who is employed by the Federal Government (including contractors) and works outside of the boundaries of the United States of America.

The AMS receives no funding from the government and unlike territorial dioceses has no regular source of funding. There is no cathedraticum (a percentage of the Sunday collection given to territorial dioceses). All programs, staff, and travel by the personnel of the AMS must be funded through donations. The geographic area of the AMS is global: anywhere that there are U.S. forces or embassies, the AMS has jurisdiction. With the exception of Holy Trinity at West Point there are no canonically erected parishes in the AMS. All are chapels (some of which are dedicated only for Catholic worship). Any installation that has a Catholic chaplain must also have a Blessed Sacrament Chapel used exclusively for that purpose.

Q. What is the unique call of Catholic military chaplains?

A. In the AMS, the term "chaplain" is used exclusively for Catholic priests. They are all ordained for and incardinated in a territorial diocese or a religious order. To serve in the military they must be U.S. citizens. They can choose the branch of the military in which they desire to serve, provided that they meet the requirements of that branch (age, physical condition, etc.).

A chaplain serves the needs of the Catholic community. He becomes their "parish" priest, is the DRE for the religious education program. He must also meet the needs of others who come to him. His is also an ecumenical and interreligious minister. He will also have other military duties to which he must attend.

Q. How would you describe the distinctness of a Catholic military chaplain?

A. Given that all AMS chaplains are priests incardinated in another diocese or religious order, each one has his own vocation story. They are first and foremost called to the Priesthood of Jesus Christ. The specific nature of their calling as a chaplain stems from a variety of factors. Many of our chaplains have served in the military in the past. Remember, 10% of those ordained in the United States for the last several years were prior servicemen. The AMS also has an active co-sponsored seminarian program. There are currently 25 young men studying in seminaries across the U.S. and at the North American College who, in accord with their bishops, will serve three years in a diocesan parish and then serve for a specified number of years in the branch of the military of their choice.

A Catholic military chaplain must be a well-rounded priest who is secure in his role and ministry, able to work in an ecumenical setting, ready and willing to serve in a war zone, creative, a self-starter, and a compassionate man eager to meet the needs of the young entrusted to his care (the average age of Catholics in the military is from 18 to 28). He must be able to move frequently and able to deal with others who move frequently.

A chaplain who works for the VA must be prepared to care for the sick and also the victims of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. He, too, must work in an ecumenical setting and be ready to deal with a variety of situations and settings that are not always under his control. The independence of each VA center makes very true the adage, "When you have seen one VA hospital, you have seen one VA hospital."

These characteristics allow the priest to serve the faithful in a time of war when there is a severe shortage of priests. Families are particularly victimized by the deployment and the war. The chaplain brings a unique perspective and assists these young families. The VA chaplain must deal with both young and old. He, too, must reach out to the families and console those who mourn.

Q. With no prior military experience, how did you become the archbishop of this diocese?

A. I spent 29 years of ordained ministry either in preparation for, or in service as, a member of the diplomatic corps of the Holy See. When I returned to the United States in 2008, I had not lived in this country since 1979.

I was the Apostolic Nuncio in the Dominican Republic and the Apostolic Delegate in Puerto Rico when the superiors in the Secretariat of State asked if I would accept a nomination as the Archbishop for the Military Services in the U.S.

Q. What are your greatest challenges?

A. My greatest challenges are also my goals. There is a severe shortage of military chaplains (but not of VA chaplains). Religious education must somehow be standardized and improved so that those who frequently change assignments can easily fit into the new setting and program. Finally, given the tenuous financial situation of the AMS, my goal is to assure a constant and regular source of income to allow the AMS to function as it should in the service of its faithful.

Q. What are your greatest joys?

A. The joys of this ministry are the people involved in it. I have been deeply impressed by the men and women I am privileged to serve. Their dedication, willingness to participate, love of country and family are virtues to be cultivated. I am humbled by their appreciation for the little I am able to do. Visiting the military academies has been a great source of hope. The young men and women there are fine, dedicated youth who offer great promise for the future. I am always eager to spend time with them. Their enthusiasm is contagious. Finally, my visits to those who are deployed in the war zone and in other hardship posts have been great lessons in sacrifice, commitment, and duty. The US can be very proud of those who serve our country.

Q. What advice would you give to future chaplains, or to those priests who are considering this service?

A. In terms of advice to future chaplains, the key is ministry which means service. We all respond to a call at ordination and we all have an idea as to how we will live that call, but it is really Almighty God and the Church that ultimately determine the needs and the best use of our talents. Authentic ministry is openness to that call and determination. It is the move from my priesthood to the priesthood of Jesus Christ determined by His Church.

Serving the Flock

The Official Catholic Directory also interviewed three chaplains and a seminarian in Rome.

Q. What is it like to be a chaplain?

A. "A chaplain is a very special vocation. Not everyone is cut out for it," says Fr. Aidan Logan, O.C.S.O., a Cistercian monk who has served nearly 20 years in the U.S. Naval Chaplain Corps. He is now a commander (level O-5, the equivalent of a lieutenant colonel in the Army), and head chaplain of the 2nd U.S. Marine Corps' infantry division on the East Coast, stationed at Camp LeJeune, NC.

"You have to be able to sustain yourself without support of community," explains Fr. Aidan. "Often you're the only priest in a place. You have to be able to stand on your own two feet."

He adds: "You have to be a good priest first. That's why you come in as a chaplain, to be a priest. We don't need more sailors or soldiers. We have plenty. We need priests…You don't want to come into the military because you're uncomfortable with your priesthood. You must be sure and confident in your priesthood….And it helps if you're physically fit – that's important for any priest anyway. You have to be tough to be a priest!"

Certain responsibilities are common to all chaplains—they provide for the sacramental needs of Catholics in their unit as well as for the religious and morale needs of all the troops in their unit, they are not allowed to carry weapons, they live and mingle daily with the troops. Yet each military branch has its own "culture" as well.

"For the Army you have to like the outdoors," says Fr. Paul Anthony Halladay, a chaplain with the rank of captain in the U.S. Army who has been a chaplain for six years, after four prior years as a parish priest in Alabama. "You can't be squeamish about cold and heat, and you can't be afraid to get dirty and wet."

"For the Navy," Fr. Halladay continues, "most everything happens on ships. You don't have to factor in the outdoors as much. The Air Force [chaplain] is more like a parish priest than other branches, and the Marines is most similar to Army chaplains because you're outside a lot."

"Navy chaplains deploy all the time," adds Fr. Aidan. "It's different from the Air Force and Army. The Navy are always on the ships, like cops on the beat, ready to respond to what situations might come up—piracy, threats, keeping sea lanes open. They're kind of the 911 sea response team."

"Commanders call chaplains 'force multipliers,'" says Fr. Halladay. "While we don't bring the heat so to speak, carry weapons, nor are we combatants, we do help keep soldiers focused, prepared and ready to do their job. We help soldiers to be the best soldiers they can be, particularly when that is compromised by what they had to do in defense of this nation."

Different from a parish priest

"As a parish priest, and I was a parish priest for four years before entering the Army, you really live within a Catholic bubble. There's little opportunity to have dialog and interaction with people outside the bubble, you're too busy," Fr. Halladay notes. "But as a military chaplain, you are immediately thrown in the midst of all faiths! As a chaplain, you work every day with chaplains of different faiths, coordinating religious services for the troops and with soldiers of the Catholic faith, another faith, or no faith at all."

"Also, I work right along side these same soldiers—in field exercises, command staff meetings, and in administrative decisions within a battalion. We go out on field exercises together. We'll train for the eventuality of mass casualties and that includes making sure soldiers of all faiths have what they need," continues Fr. Halladay.

Fr. Aidan concurs: "From the first day, we're cheek to jowl with Protestants. We see quickly the strength of our faith and the need for absolute clarity about our Catholic faith because there are other chaplains around to whom the troops can go...You have the opportunity to explain what you believe, and why. Most of the Protestant chaplains have never met a Catholic priest in their lives and now they're living with one! There's a good ecumenical side to it!"

Responsible, Prepared

"A chaplain compiles a religious preference profile for the soldiers in his command, including dietary needs," explains Fr. Halladay. "On Ash Wednesday and Good Friday, a Catholic soldier cannot eat meat, on the feast of Ramadan, a Muslim soldier can only eat before dawn and after sunset —you have to make sure appropriate rations are available. I also must put in for all the things I need for Mass, and I must prepare for a minimum of six months, based on the Catholic population in my battalion—things like the wine and hosts. I have to estimate how many soldiers will attend daily and Sunday Masses, and plan appropriately. When you're on a field exercise, and then later deployed, if you're not prepared, you don't have it!"

On deployment, ensuring soldiers' religious needs are met may often mean bringing in another chaplain from another unit, such as flying in a Navy chaplain to say Mass for Army troops in Afghanistan.

Attentive to the soul, the inner man

Saint Jean Vianney wrote: "The priesthood is the love of the heart of Jesus." Military chaplains live that every day.

A commander relies on his chaplain to know the pulse of the troops under his command. Troops lean on their chaplain for spiritual, religious, personal and morale issues.

"You're right there, right alongside with the troops," explains Fr. Halladay, who clearly loves what he does, just like every chaplain we interviewed. "They might show me a particular weapon, or what they're learning on preventative maintenance of their vehicles, or in grenade training, or at the shooting range."

"I'll ask how they're doing. They'll talk about their personal lives. Just conversation. You're there for them, and they know that what they tell you isn't going anywhere else."

"If a unit is training really hard for deployment and it's starting to show in terms of family problems – for example you start hearing, 'Hey, chaplain, my wife and I aren't getting along. We have different schedules and we're not seeing each other,' etc..."

"You get enough of those comments and you talk to your commander, saying maybe it's time for an Organizational Day—where the commander suspends all operations in the battalion and everyone comes together for recreation, all families included. It might be held in the middle of the week, say on a Wednesday. Troops are on a hard grind for deployment and then they get a day off—it's a huge morale boost. Fr. Halladay continues, "You want soldiers well-prepared for maybe a year deployment. One of biggest things we do as chaplains is to keep up morale in a unit. It's important."

Being there when it counts

Andy Young graduated from the Naval Academy, entered the Marine Corps (USMC), and served two tours, in Afghanistan and Iraq. He was part of the invasion force that went from Kuwait to Iraq after 9-11 and left the military with the rank of Captain, USMC. Now he's a seminarian, studying in Rome for the Diocese of Sioux Falls, SD. He's also a chaplain candidate for the U.S. Navy.

"At Camp Pendleton I'd go to daily Mass and it would be me and the priest, and maybe one or two others," says Mr. Young. "But when we were deployed and in Kuwait, waiting to go into Iraq, we'd have 70 to 80 people at daily Mass, and long lines for confession. When things are tough, people turn to God. When you're in a war zone, when you don't know what the next day will hold for you, you want to be clean of sin, at least I did."

"A chaplain can be a mediator to bring people to know Christ, especially in deployment, away from family and home." Mr. Young adds. "These young soldiers are alone, scared. They're looking for anything—peace, hope, ultimate meaning in life. Christ is the answer to all of it. When things go bad, you turn to the only person who can console you."

Don't forget the veterans!

Fr. James Burnett retired from the Air Force in 1999. For 10 years he's been serving veterans with the Veterans Administration. He is the chief of chaplain services at Hines VA Hospital in Chicago; president, National Conference of Veterans Affairs Chaplains (NCVAC); and a board certified chaplain for NCVAC. The NCVAC has 340 Catholic priests in various salaried positions within the VA system.

Hines is one of the largest hospitals in the VA system, serving 500 patients with needs ranging from spinal cord injuries and blindness rehab, to elder care, hospice and more. He has nine chaplains on his staff. For six of the ten years Fr. Burnett worked in hospice care. He is thrilled that a new hospice wing of the hospital is opening, saying that they serve up to 22 hospice patients at any given time.

"People ask me if it's depressing to be involved in hospice. Not at all!" responds Fr. Burnett. "It's very pleasing to be there in the last days of a veteran, who has served his country well. Now it's our turn to serve him."

Q. Why did you become a military chaplain?

A. "I'd been giving priests retreats for years," says Fr. Aidan. "A number of chaplains came on these retreats. They were the happiest priests I'd ever seen, whereas the others were burned out with low morale. I was impressed with the chaplains. When the Gulf War came on in '91, I got calls to become a chaplain...I asked my superior. He said yes. My spiritual director said yes. So here I am today, back where I first started, in Camp LeJeune."

Fr. Burnett has a different story: "I wanted to see the world. I was priest in southeast Iowa, serving two parishes, and looking for something else. On a visit with friends near Bellville, Ill., we were joined one dinner by someone who was on active duty at nearby Scott Air Force Base. He gave me a tour of the base, showed me the chapel and I met the Catholic chaplain. He wasn't very friendly and I thought, 'I could do better than that.' So I went home, prayed about it, and then asked permission of my bishop to serve in the military. He said OK!"

Upon retirement, Fr. Burnett applied for chief of chaplain services at Hines VA. "I felt a calling from the Lord to get the word out about what's happening with the returning veterans from Afghanistan and Iraq," he says.

Challenges

"One of the greatest challenges is loneliness," says Fr. Paul Halladay, although he's quick to enumerate his abundant joys after explaining what he means. "You're the only chaplain in your battalion. You're the one everyone comes to with personal and religious issues. As a Catholic priest you're typically the only Catholic priest in your brigade so there's not another priest you can talk to close by."

Another challenge is the shortage of priests in the military, especially in the Army. That means a chaplain often pulls double and triple duty.

"My Army rank makes me a battalion chaplain, "says Fr. Halladay. "But because of my religious denomination as a Catholic priest, I often work as the only Catholic priest on a post, which is 25,000 to 35,000 troops...We have more than 1,000 people at Mass each weekend. I run all the Catholic programs, etc."

Fr. Burnett sees another challenge, namely to help to ease the transition of a veteran back home. One lament is that most hometown clergy, who are often too busy, don't understand the unique problems, or what's needed for healing, of a veteran.

"In as little as two weeks, a soldier can go from active duty to a VA hospital," says Fr. Burnett. "It's hard to wrap your head around that; their heads are spinning...It's important for local clergy to understand terms such as traumatic brain injury, post traumatic stress disorder, poly trauma (multiple problems), so they know what they're getting and how to deal with it."

Over the last two years, Fr. Burnett held two well-attended conferences, both funded by his regional VA, to educate non-military priests on how to understand the specific needs of veterans in their community. Topics included the way different cultures express emotions, how female veterans process battle scars differently from men, and the symptoms of traumatic brain injury, which is a hidden wound, a shaking of the brain. A soldier might return not knowing his children, not able to communicate with his spouse, or remember his job even though he's done if for years. "They often end up at the VA as the last ultimatum of his wife," says Fr. Burnett. "There also can be problems in a marriage when the returning veteran feels like a stranger in his own home. He's gone through so much trauma in his deployment while his spouse had to run everything in his absence. It's good for priests to know how to deal with these things."

Joys

"The greatest joys of being a chaplain? There's a lot of those,' says Fr. Halladay without hesitation. "I'd say bringing someone back to their faith—bringing them to a renewed appreciation of faith in their life—that's one of the best feelings in the world."

Fr. Halladay continues: "You run the RCIA program, bring them into church at Easter – beautiful. You prepare for marriage. It's wonderful...just being available for a soldier for what he had to do for our country, psychologically and physically—to know you have that role in someone's life is phenomenal!"

"It's an opportunity to give a masculine face to the Catholic faith," notes Fr. Aiden. "One of the problems of parishes can be that there are not a lot of strong masculine models there, but you're mostly with men in a military environment."

Fr. Aidan adds, "You help soldiers to understand there's an adult way to be a Catholic. Most guys run on fumes. They remember something of their faith from their grandmother and mother but there's not much adult to it – even for those with kids, their faith is centered around their kids. But in the military, you show them it's an adult thing, that there's an adult way to live the faith."

Another of Fr. Aidan's joys happened recently. On an annual pilgrimage with midshipmen from the Naval Academy to Rome, he was surprised to find that a young man he'd known in the medical corps was now in the seminary, inspired by Fr. Aidan.

For Fr. Burnett, his greatest joy is serving the needs of the veterans as a veteran himself, adding "It's a joy to enlighten hometown clergy on returning veterans."

Q. Has it changed you?

A. "Absolutely." says Fr. Aiden. "But that's just life. I think I've become more confirmed in my faith and priesthood; partly because I get to deal with people all the time who don't have the faith and I see what a lack it is. I also see what it means to be a Catholic – to have the faith in extreme situations and to see how it changes people."

Vocations

"The largest single group who enters the seminary has served in military," says Fr. Aidan. "The Naval Academy is 52 percent Catholic. West Point is about 1/3 Catholic."

"You see the need for Catholic chaplains," says Mr. Young. "In an emergency situation, a Catholic priest can run any service, whereas no one else can consecrate the Eucharist or say Mass."

Fr. Burnett is among many chaplains with high praise for their archbishop, crediting him with helping to foster an increased awareness of the chaplaincy and an increase in vocations. "When I applied to the VA 10 years ago," he says, "I was the only Catholic priest applying. Now we have many applications. Three years ago we had 100 VA chaplains. Now we are 340 strong. See what the Lord is doing! Priests who apply to work here want to give back to veterans for serving our country."

But plenty more chaplains are needed.

"There's a huge potential for vocations in the military," Fr. Halladay points out, citing that 18% of all ordinations in the U.S. over the past 10 years have come from those with previous military service or from a military family."

"Any priest who is sent to the military is like an investment. He goes in, and he returns with vocations for you," adds Fr. Halladay. "The backbone of the military is made up of unmarried men between the ages of 18 to 24."

And when Mr. Young describes the marks of a good soldier—love of country and God over self, integrity, obedience, courage—they echo the marks of a good military chaplain, which, for Mr. Young, include dedication to leading his flock and showing his love for Christ. As he puts it, "If you're doing five or six Masses a day, that's tough. We need chaplains who are willing to give 110% every day!...They are living examples of what it means to follow Christ."

"Those who are serving their country need to have Catholic priests serving with them," says Mr. Young. "How else will they receive the sacraments? It's so important and yet it's something we so easily take for granted because most of us can receive sacraments any time we want...at any parish church."

"This is a beautiful way to be a priest," sums up Fr. Halladay. "It's also a very needed ministry." ◆

PRIESTS FOR LIFE – MISSIONARIES OF THE GOSPEL OF LIFE

As Catholics, we have the unique opportunity to turn the abortion tragedy around.

This directory outlines the vast structure of the Catholic Church in the United States. Imagine how many people we reach through our parishes, schools, and other institutions. Then imagine what can happen as our priests infuse that vast structure with clear, vigorous, and compassionate pro-life teaching and action.

The Church is the only institution that has a Divine guarantee that it will prevail over the culture of death. "The gates of hell will not prevail against it," the Lord Himself said (Mt. 16:18). Those gates of hell cannot withstand the power of heaven. The gates of sin melt in the presence of grace; the gates of falsehood collapse in the presence of truth; the gates of death fall in the presence of the People of Life.

To fully engage the Church's response to the evils of abortion and euthanasia does not so much require more structure as it does more spirit, more awareness, more courage, and more determination to use both the means and the opportunities we already have.

That is what Priests for Life is all about. From the heart of the Church, it is a movement of priests helping the rest of the Church to use her full strength to build a Culture of Life, that we may all be missionaries of the Gospel of Life. Please join us today!

"During a challenging economic climate, CCS was a great help in motivating our parish to articulate the vision it has for its future. While the campaign resulted in increased financial resources, it also produced additional volunteers and new relationships among parishioners. The end result of our campaign is not limited to financial success; it has also infused new enthusiasm in the parish itself.

This is the second time that I have worked with CCS and if I have the need for such services in the future, CCS will always be at the top of my list!"

The Year for Priests: Why St. John Vianney?

June 19, 2009 – June 19, 2010

By Fr. Chris Heath

Christ the Great High Priest Icon © MCzarnecki2010

Most priests know just enough about the Curé of Ars to consider him only a historical oddity. The patron saint of priests, some would say, was a holy man for his time, but not a model for the modern priesthood, especially here in the United States. But Pope Benedict XVI does not agree. In 2009, he chose a Year for Priests to coincide with the 150th anniversary of St. John Vianney's death. Benedict's choice was no accident. Calling the Church—and especially the clergy—to "interior renewal for the sake of a stronger and more incisive witness to the Gospel in today's world," he invited us during this special year to "learn for ourselves something of the pastoral plan of St. John Vianney." The Year for Priests, which began and ended on the Solemnity of the Sacred Heart of Jesus—also not a coincidence—gave the Church this challenge.

The great Curé first came to the French village of Ars a nobody, relegated to a lost parish in the middle of nowhere. This place—known for its fog, stagnant water and bad roads—had been abandoned for several years following the French Revolution and its ensuing spiritual and material devastation. For the first 10 years of his 40-year pastorate, St. John labored tirelessly for change, at great personal cost.

The church building sat dilapidated, the rectory showed itself a wreck, and for many years the parish was dirt poor. Fr. Vianney's flock numbered just 230 souls living in 60 households.

In his early years as pastor, St. John Vianney performed only a handful of weddings, funerals, baptisms and sick calls. Local townspeople were at best unimpressed with the new pastor. At worst, apathy and active resistance made his task even more daunting. St. John was accused of wrongdoing and even abuse. People whose livelihoods and lifestyles were threatened by his preaching complained to both civil and ecclesiastical authorities to have him removed. Other priests in the diocese thought he was a simpleton or downright dangerous to the Church. The Evil One, too, waged intense spiritual battles to discourage St. John and to frighten his parishioners away.

This situation would have disheartened most priests, but this pastor celebrated Mass prayerfully every day without fail. Slowly his consistency drew the attention of his parishioners, and over time, his small church became filled for daily Mass. St. John knew that his skills as a preacher were limited, but he took his responsibility seriously. He spent hours painstakingly handwriting his Sunday homilies. When preaching, his emotions often overtook him and he would cry as he described the horrors of sin and the dangers his people faced because of their poor choices. He spoke out against dancing, gambling, cursing, missing Sunday Mass and especially against drinking, the cause of much of the village's family discord and poverty. He called people to daily prayer. But the pastor of Ars did even more. He modeled it for them. As people began to see the error of their ways, they sought him out for confession.

Nothing was easy about St. John's pastoral assignment. For example, many village children were forced into manual labor and crime. He opened an orphanage and day school to keep them safe, to teach them the basics of reading and writing, and to teach them the catechism. Often this pastor had little to offer the children for daily meals, but somehow just enough donated food or money would find its way into his hands so that he could provide for their needs one more day. Fr. Vianney named his orphanage "Providence" because he knew it was only by God's hand that he was able to care for so many with so little.

For 10 long years, St. John persevered in his often-thankless pastoral work and prayer. But eventually he converted the desolate and disconsolate place into a hub of Catholic life. By then, most of his parish had returned to the faith, and now people from other towns came to Ars to attend his Masses, and to wait in ever-growing lines for a few moments with him in confession. Even the French railway changed its booking procedures to accommodate the thousands of people who flocked to see Fr.

Vianney year after year. Near the end, St. John was spending 18 hours a day in the confessional. In the last year of his life, some 120,000 people came to Ars to see a man who was ordained initially without the faculties to preach or hear confessions, a man whom the educated and well-placed had written-off as a "half-wit." To disregard his witness to faith, hope, and love—then or now—is to miss the Gospel itself.

Standing in the breach:
An unwitting example and point of reference

In his time, Fr. Vianney was horrified when people gave him honors. What would he think today about a Pope linking him with "a pastoral plan" for the world's priests? Regardless, St. John offers the Church a "point of reference" for dealing with the weakness of her ministers. If only priests and people were aware of the immense gift of this vocation to the Church!

"Were we to fully realize what a priest is on earth, we would die: not of fright, but of love," Fr. Vianney would say, showing us that the ordained and those whom they serve should treat with great care this fragile vocation that helps reveal Christ in the world. Key for priests is the idea of "interior renewal," which begins with an uncompromising approach to the moral and doctrinal truths of the Catholic faith. As a parish priest, St. John stood in the breach against the rationalism and "enlightenment" of the age in which he lived, against the atheists, the intelligentsia, and against the political and economic forces of his time, not with aggression borne of power, but with the power of the Word. Too, his unwavering humility and gentleness in response to accusation, resistance and slander diffused his enemies' attacks. A lack of material resources only increased his faith in Providence. In the face of others' lost faith, he lived his own, modeled it and preached about it in a way that made it credible by example, and thus changed people's lives. Put simply, he brought people to Christ.

For the People of God, this Year for Priests was meant to be a time to pray for priests, to sustain and help them in their ministry, and to rediscover, in the midst of scandal and weakness, the world's absolute need for a purified priesthood to represent the love of God, and the active presence of Jesus Christ in the service of charity and in the Eucharist. Pope Benedict even went so far as to state that the world would be lost without the Real Presence of Christ, and it is the priest who mediates this Real Presence.

When people esteem the priesthood, priests are more conscious of the responsibility they have to model Christ, to strive for spiritual perfection, and to identify themselves more personally with Christ, "to harmonize his life as a minister with the holiness of the ministry he has received." St. John Vianney trembled from a conviction of his personal inadequacy. Three times he ran away from his parish "to weep over his poor life," and each time his parishioners carried him back to the church. His people were ready to support him even when he was overwhelmed by his own weakness. Perhaps it was called "Year 'for' Priests" and not "Year 'of' Priests" precisely to call attention to what the Catholic priesthood needs to thrive in the Church and in the world: a renewed appreciation for the priesthood even as her ministers struggle to live up to its demands and ideals. The Year was "for" priests to benefit them personally, and as they grow the Church will benefit as well.

St. John Vianney said that "the priesthood is the love of the heart of Jesus." Jesus is the perfect and incarnate representation of the Father. His heart, full of love and pierced for all on the Cross, needs to be seen and experienced in the world in every generation. And priests are ordained precisely for this ministry: to show that love personally and sacramentally. Pope Benedict could have pointed to any one of hundreds of priest-saints of the past, or even some who have lived in our lifetime, but he chose the Curé of Ars. He has pointed to his life as a simple parish priest and said our lives should be more like his: personally engaging, completely invested, "enthralled by Christ," not just a functionary but consciously and intentionally striving be a "sign and presence of God's infinite mercy," or to use the traditional concept, an alter Christus. The Sacred Heart of Jesus, then, is the perfect symbol for this Year, the most appropriate beginning and ending to the Year for Priests.

"Were we to fully realize what a priest is on earth, we would die: not of fright, but of love," Fr. Vianney would say, showing us that the ordained and those whom they serve should treat with great care this fragile vocation that helps reveal Christ in the world.

Whether priests take their cue from St. John Vianney remains to be seen. Various theological and ecclesiological concepts about the priesthood compete for attention in the Church today. Scandals within the Church force us to look at many facets of priests' lives and psyches and could easily distract our attention away from an element that is foundational to Benedict's main objective: the priest as image of Christ—a sacramental and supernatural reality that St. John, with all his limitations, figured out how to live. Hopefully many will take up the task to study St. John's pastoral activity and unpack it for a new age of the Church. At this tempestuous point in the third millennium, the Curé of Ars could not be more relevant.

People's Prayer for Priests

Dear Lord,
we pray that the Blessed Mother
wrap her mantle around your priests and through her intercession strengthen them for their ministry.

We pray that Mary will guide your priests to follow her own words,
"Do whatever He tells you" (Jn 2:5)

May your priests have the heart of St. Joseph,
Mary's most chaste spouse.

May the Blessed Mother's own pierced heart inspire them to embrace all who suffer at the foot of the cross.

May your priests be holy,
filled with the fire of your love seeking nothing but your greater glory and the salvation of souls.

Amen.

Saint John Vianney, pray for us.

Food for the Journey:

Five Saints and the Bread of Life

By Ricky J. McRoskey

Dr. Drew Peterson is about to sit down to breakfast. It's a humid February morning in Port-au-Prince, and the orthopedic surgeon from San Diego is steeling himself for another day in which he'll operate on people with crushed bones from the massive earthquake that leveled the Caribbean city weeks earlier. He has already finished a set of pushups and a three-mile run before the sun has risen.

Like the many other doctors in Haiti now, Dr. Peterson is here to serve. Over the course of 10 days, he and a group of other surgeons, nurses, and anesthesiologists from San Diego's Scripps Medical Response Team will perform hundreds of operations on wounded Haitians in a packed Catholic hospital. At his disposal are surgical tools, medications, and decades of experience in the operating room. But he needs more. To manage the week's toil—the rigors of surgery, the stench of dead bodies, and the sight of crippled children—he needs to rejuvenate. Constantly. "You need to take care of the body," he says, "especially at a time like this."

It's why, each morning, after he's exercised, showered, and gone to Mass, he and the doctors will convene for a hearty breakfast of eggs and cheese, rice, mangos, cantaloupe, grapes, slices of ham and salami. It's why, to provide for the much-needed energy at the hospital, he will pack himself dried apricots and figs, nuts, PowerBars, powdered Gatorade and bottled water. They came to Haiti on a mission to heal the wounded, and to do it right they need the energy and strength to sustain themselves. In other words, in a land of hunger and death, you need life. You need hope. You need strength.

And, in a land of hunger and death, you need food.

In 2009, Pope Benedict XVI welcomed five new saints to the Catholic Church, saints who had lived in times of hunger and death—ages of physical, emotional, and spiritual longing. Three of them lived through Italy's 19th-century Industrial Revolution, which brought greater efficiency to the nation's businesses, but also longer working hours, sordid factories, and exhausted families. One saint led Portugal in the midst of war. Another lived in medieval Italy during the plague. Throughout their lives, they fought battles, worked in spinning mills, studied law, helped cholera victims, contracted disease, went blind, lost children, and withstood family rejections and heresy accusations.

Yet they succumbed to none of it. Instead of lamenting the circumstances of their lives, we remember them for their endurance. We remember the monastery that St. Bernardo Tolomei founded, or the order of St. Caterina Volpicelli, or St. Nuno's courage on the battlefield and in the convent. We remember St. Arcangelo's advocacy for working women, and St. Geltrude's ministry to poor Italian families. But what is perhaps most fascinating about these five saints is not their different accomplishments, but what unequivocally united them, the singular source of all energy, strength, and nourishment from which they made their societies better: the Eucharist.

In his homily canonizing these five last April, Pope Benedict said, "Nourished with the Eucharistic Bread, the Saints we are venerating today brought their mission of evangelical love to completion."

That's the common thread: they all loved the Eucharist, the true, actual body and blood of Christ. It was the mystery, the spiritual "food," that kept them going. Each of them spent countless hours in front of the Blessed Sacrament and received it frequently at Mass. In doing so, they embraced a strange, remarkable paradox—that we as Catholics derive our strength by remembering and participating in an instance of unimaginable suffering, in which the most powerful person to have ever walked the Earth was punched, spat on, whipped, bloodied, ridiculed, condemned, stripped naked, punctured, and murdered. It's baffling: That's our nourishment? That's supposed to give us strength? That's our hope?

It's hard to believe, until we consider the rest of the story. Because embracing the Eucharist, as these five saints show, means embracing the fact that the story doesn't end at Christ's death. He rises, comes back, and fills his believers with a sense of hope and inspiration that impels them forward. For these five, the Eucharist taught them that every battle for good is worth fighting. You just need to have the strength, the bread—indeed, the spiritual food—to confront it. And, as Catholics, it's something that we have access to, in every church, every day—just as they did.

The Italians of the Industrial Age

Three of the saints came of age in an Italian society that was being wildly transformed. Geltrude Comensoli, Caterina Volpicelli, and Arcangelo Tadini were all born within eight years of one another, in the mid-1800s, just as Italy was joining the Industrial Revolution. Previously rural societies began to morph into technological nations, manufacturing everything from clothing to machinery. But with new opportunity came new dangers. Workplace accidents became prevalent. The poor lived in disease-ridden cities. Children worked long hours, and women had to balance work life with family time. That's when these three made their mark.

Fr. Arcangelo Tadini, a northern Italian priest known for his powerful preaching and zeal, was a workhorse. One gets the sense from his biography that this was a man of incredible grit. While in the seminary, he injured his leg badly—and limped the rest of his life. When he was out of the seminary, he contracted a serious illness—and recovered. He started a soup kitchen, rebuilt a church, and constructed a spinning factory. He never seemed to stop. And how, again, did he have the energy? The Vatican explains: "His parishioners would see him for hours in front of the Blessed Sacrament, despite his disability."

Where others saw work as dismal, he saw it as an opportunity to grow in faith. He founded several Catholic organizations devoted to improving the lives of the working poor. One of them, the Congregation of Worker Sisters of the Holy House of Nazareth, featured sisters who, under his direction, devoted their lives to working alongside other women in Italian factories, encouraging them and offering them hope despite aching joints and acrid air. The organization exists to this day.

If Arcangelo was tireless, Geltrude Comensoli was resilient. In 1880, the 33-year-old Italian nun had the chance to directly ask Pope Leo XIII what he thought of her launching an organization devoted to (what else?) Eucharistic adoration. Good, he said, but it wasn't enough in this new society. There were too many women whose spiritual lives were suffering from too much work, he thought; she needed to minister to female factory workers in the process. One can imagine her frustration, like that of an architect who spends years painstakingly sketching a building's design, only to have the master builder say, "It looks good. Now make it twice as big, with more windows."

So she went back to the drawing board, and to the Blessed Sacrament, and spent the next two years forming the Congregation of the Sacramentine Sisters of Bergamo with the bishop's support. It was a resounding—albeit arduous—success. Through the order's example of perpetual adoration and its emphasis on the primacy of family over work, it brought perspective to a nation hypnotized by industry. As for St. Geltrude, her life ended where she spent much of it: in the midst of adoration.

Meanwhile, to the far south in Naples, Caterina Volpicelli grew up with wealth, shielded from the indignity of the factory. Early life centered not on the spinning mill, but theaters, ballet, literature, and music. That is, until she decided these things had become too much of a priority. At 15, at the recommendation of a spiritual advisor, she left it all behind, embracing instead the religious life.

It prompts an interesting question: What's more difficult—staying focused on the important things despite work, or despite luxury? Caterina ultimately established—among other things—the Handmaids of the Sacred Heart, an order that emphasized the importance of the family. The Handmaids also focused on care for those suffering from cholera, a debilitating intestinal disease that left its victims weak, nauseous, and dehydrated. It was also extremely contagious, requiring a patience and love that was otherworldly.

Not surprisingly, the Vatican says Caterina was motivated by an "ardent love of the Eucharist," something that prompted her to build a shrine to the Sacred Heart in Naples, for the purpose of Eucharistic adoration.

The Warrior

A Brief Look at Forthcoming Saints of 2010

By Ricky J. McRoskey

Mary MacKillop (1842-1909)

Who she was: A 19th-century Australian nun, MacKillop founded the Sisters of Saint Joseph of the Sacred Heart, an order dedicated to education, particularly for the children of the working poor. Today, the congregation has a presence in Australia, New Zealand, Brazil, Peru, Uganda, and Thailand.

Notable: MacKillop, who will be known as St. Mary of the Cross, is slated to become the first Australian saint.

Quotable: "Never see a need without doing something about it."

Andre Bessette (1845-1937)

Who he was: A Canadian Holy Cross brother, Bessette in 1904 founded the St. Joseph's Oratory of Mt. Royal in Montreal, a modern-day 420-foot basilica visited by millions of pilgrims each year. Known for his humility and great devotion to St. Joseph, he became recognized for his healing ministry after thousands of ailing people were cured at his hands in Montreal. But he was always quick to dispel any notion of possessing a personal power: "I do not cure," he would say. "St. Joseph cures."

Notable: Bessette will become the first member of the Holy Cross order to be recognized as a saint.

Quotable: Describing one of his first jobs as a Holy Cross brother, in which he answered the door and welcomed guests at a Montreal college: "At the end of my novitiate, my superiors showed me the door—and I stayed there for 40 years."

Portuguese general named Nuno de Santa Maria Alvares Pereira. A devout Christian, Nuno led his troops in an epic battle that drove out the Castillians, secured a long period of peace, and brought the underdog general great notoriety and riches.

It's not hard to imagine the scenes that followed, of doting women and obsequious friends hoping to bask in the glow of his fame. But what's most incredible about Nuno is that the fame and riches didn't go to his head. He realized, as Pope Benedict said, that "in any situation, even of a military and warlike nature, it is possible to act and live out the values and principles of Christian life." He fasted three days a week. He built churches and monasteries. And after his wife and two sons had died, he gave up his wealth and spent the rest of his life in a Carmelite convent, where he prayed, nurtured a deep love for the Eucharist (there it is again!), and distributed bread to the poor.

The Monk

Then there's Bernardo Tolomei. A 13th-century knight and law scholar who suffered from partial blindness, he retreated from society at age 41 to work and pray in solitude on his family's farms. He eventually established a Benedictine monastery there in Tuscany, where he would serve as abbot for 27 straight years and live what Pope Benedict called "the Eucharistic life." The monastery, the Abbey of Mt. Oliveto, still stands in the middle of the lush fields today, where its monks work as Bernardo did, cultivating wheat, barley, beans, vineyards and olives for the community.

This begs the question: What sort of person with wealth and an education decides, at age 41, to retreat into the fields and pray, to hunch over the ground and pull weeds, plant seeds, and farm under the Italian sun—while blind? Or, perhaps more importantly, what sort of person, accustomed to this life of prayer and solitude, leaves the monastery at age 76 to help plague-ridden monks at another monastery? And then catches the plague himself and dies?

The answer: a person that is called to it by love. What is most striking about St. Bernardo is that each of the decisions of his life—as strange as they may have appeared to others—came from a humble conviction. Also striking is that this strength of conviction and perseverance, by some remarkable coincidence, has the very same source as that of three other Italians and a Portuguese general who were canonized on the same day.

Perhaps most remarkable about the life of a saint is the incredible energy it requires. Building organizations and treating illnesses requires constant renewal and rejuvenation, as does doing any other good today—operating on an earthquake victim, caring for the elderly, bearing a child.

We live in the same land of hunger and death that these saints did. For them, courage came from the peaceful moments before a tabernacle and the sacrament of the Eucharist.

The question is, today, as we struggle through the aches and pains of work, sickness, and family life, where will we look for the strength to overcome them? That is, in a land of hunger and death, where will we look for the Bread of Life?

Juana Josefa Cipitria Barriola (1845-1912)

Who she was: A Spanish nun known as Mother Candida, she founded the Congregation of the Daughters of Jesus in 1871, an order dedicated to the education of children and the advancement of women in Spain. Today, the Daughters of Jesus teach in 17 countries throughout Latin America, Europe, Asia, and Africa.

Notable: Mother Candida was strongly influenced by the spiritual exercises of St. Ignatius, which seek to deepen faith and understanding through a series of regular meditations, mental exercises, prayers, and visualization techniques.

Quotable: "Where there is no room for the poor, there is no room for me."

Giulia Salzano (1846-1929)

Who she was: A 19th-century nun from southern Italy with a passion for teaching, Salzano founded an order whose mission centered on educating those yet to be baptized or confirmed, called the Congregation of the Catechetical Sisters of the Sacred Heart.

Notable: Giulia was a friend and colleague of Catherine Volpicelli, the Naples-born nun known for her ministry to cholera victims who was canonized in 2009. The two shared a deep devotion to the Sacred Heart.

Quotable: "While I have any life left in me, I will continue to teach the catechism. And then, I assure you, I would be very happy to die teaching the catechism."

Camilla Battista Varano (1458-1524)

Who she was: A 15th-century princess of the central Italian city of Camerino, Camilla eschewed a life of wealth to become a member of the Poor Clares, a Franciscan order of contemplative nuns. She ultimately founded several Poor Clare communities throughout Italy and was known for her extensive writings, which described her ecstatic religious experiences that focused on Christ's Passion.

Notable: Battista died from the plague in 1524, right at the onset of the Protestant Reformation.

Quotable: "You have resurrected me in You, true life who give life to all the living."

Stanislaw Soltys Kazimierczyk (1433-1489)

Who he was: A 15th-century Polish priest, Stanislaw was known as a powerful preacher and confessor who ministered to the poor and sick. He was a member of the Canons Regular of the Lateran, an order of priests who upheld the communal monastic ideals of the early Christians.

Notable: Stanislaw was a scholar of theology and philosophy at the Jagiellonian University in Krakow, one of Europe's oldest universities—and the alma mater of Pope John Paul II.

New Media and the Church

By Karen A. Walker

New media, as defined in Wikipedia (itself the result of new media), "encompasses the emergence of digital, computerized, or networked information and communication technologies in the later part of the 20th century." Important components include two-way (or multi-party) interaction and digital technology. Web 2.0, iPhone, Blackberry, smart phones, Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, Second Life, LinkedIN, Texting, Hulu, hyperlinking, social networking, hypercasting, and iPad—all are part of the new media.

For the Church, the guardian on earth of the timeless teachings of Christ, is this rapidly evolving technology a change to reckon with or merely a passing fad? And, if it is to be reckoned with, how?

Permanence and pace of development

Consider this. Forty-five years ago computers were enormous "main frames," requiring large, air-cooled rooms. Now those technological masterpieces are called dinosaurs.

Only 13 years ago "Google" was a word that didn't make sense! Now it's a verb.

And, in an age of texting and tweets, who remembers pay phones? Yet mobile phones have only become commonplace over the past 10 years or so.

Not only is new technology here to stay, its pace of development over the last few years has been phenomenal. And the number of people affected is enormous. According to Apple, the first two and half years of the iPhone spawned more than 195,000 applications ("apps") created by developers worldwide, and generated more than 4 billion downloads!

Apple's iTunes alone has more than 100 million registered users (and their names, credit card numbers and music choices). More than 8.5 billion songs have been sold, in 23 countries, making iTunes the largest music retailer in the world. Amazon.com is the largest "bookstore" in the world.

Think about it. Anyone over age 35 learned about cell phones as an adult. Students in elementary school today can't imagine life without them!

"My dad is 73; he still takes a newspaper and reads it cover to cover every day," notes Scott Turicchi, CEO of j2Global, an international digital communications firm. "I'm 40, and I rarely read a newspaper these days because I have alternative ways of getting my information. My daughter is 9. She probably won't even know what a newspaper is."

What was unimaginable five years ago is taken for granted today. New media is the "Wild West" of the Third Millennium.

Does it really matter to the Church?

Certainly the Church, its mission and Magisterium has outlived, unphased, more profound social upheavals and cultural revolutions than this technological one. Consider the Roman persecution, the Plague, the Reformation, wars of every sort, even violent godless regimes such as Marxism and Communism. What is texting compared to these?

At first blush, even the juxtaposition of Church and new media seems absurd. Timeless truth, the Holy Trinity, God-made-Man, eternal salvation and each individual's inestimable dignity and value in the eyes of God on the one hand vs. Twitter, texting, Facebook and blogging on the other.

Yet while Church doctrine and mission are linked inexorably to its unchanging, unchangeable founder, Our Lord Jesus Christ, its communication and evangelical outreach can't help but include the technological tools of the era.

Pope John Paul II recognized this, often exhorting the faithful to use every means available to communicate the gospel message. In his Apostolic Letter to those responsible for communications, John Paul II wrote: "...the Church is not only called upon to use the mass media to spread the Gospel but, today more than ever, to integrate the message of salvation into the "new culture" that these powerful means of communication create and amplify. It tells us that the use of the techniques and the technologies of contemporary communications is an integral part of its mission in the third millennium."

Even before Pope John Paul II, other individuals have recognized the power of the "new media" of their era and became early adapters. Archbishop Fulton Sheen, Fr. Patrick Peyton, St. Maximilian Kolbe, even Mother Angelica with her early foray into cable television and satellite broadcasting, were all early adapters for their day and age. But these were individuals who saw and seized the moment, not the Church as a whole.

Reach people where they are

Regardless of whether one "tweets" or uses Facebook, nearly everyone in the U.S. owns at least one computer or smart phone and uses it to search for information. Twenty years ago people used the Yellow Pages and the newspaper. Today they use the Internet.

Newspapers are nearly dead. Why place a classified ad or read the paper, when you can place an ad for free on craigslist? Why page through a newspaper with yesterday's headlines when you can scan the Web for local, regional, state, national and international news. Not only does a reader get news in "real time," the news is delivered in a more engaging, interactive manner (often referred to as "Web 2.0").

Online, a reader can peruse a video, respond immediately with a comment, search for counter opinions and more.... All in a span of 10 minutes.

New media affects even journalism, and journalistic standards. FoxNews, CNN, ABC, NBC, and CBS report a story. But hundreds of thousands of bloggers, so-called "citizen journalists," may tell the same story a different way, reveal another side of the story, show video clips that expose more details and so forth.

In 2009, a dramatic example of the impact of this unfettered access to information took place as the world watched YouTube videos and Twitter posts by Iranians, protesting in massive numbers against presidential election results. The videos and news feeds were posted by citizens on the streets, in the midst of the action, and they revealed a vastly different reality than official Iranian news accounts.

New media users choose what streams and sources of information are important to them, and those sources are available at their fingertips. They are actively engaged in their information gathering and communication process, not passive TV viewers. "Google Wave" is the newest and most robust in a string of new, evolving, free technologies that enable a user to "communicate and collaborate in real time," as Google Wave describes itself.

Put simply: If most people today get their secular news and information online, in an interactive way, then this is how they will search for—and expect to find—news about the Church, especially about their local parish, mass times, Catholic school news and events.

Yet how many parishes and Catholic schools in the U.S. don't have a website, don't have a useful one, or don't keep it current?

What was unimaginable five years ago is taken for granted today. New media is the "Wild West" of the Third Millennium.

Video explosion

Tom Loarie, chairman of Mercador MedSystems, chairman of Silicon BioDevices and a columnist for the Catholic Business Journal, recently attended a trade show featuring the latest in digital advances.

"The use of video and 4G [bandwidth] is increasing dramatically," he reports. "Smart phones are getting smarter, and over the next two to three years video will see exponential growth."

At the time of this article, Apple's iPad was just made public. By next year, it could easily have spawned other digital advances, tools and uses. "The iPad has all kinds of new possibilities," says Mr. Loarie. "People could be going into mass with the readings on their iPad. I don't think we've thought creatively about that yet."

Mr. Turicchi agrees. "We're moving more and more into the video realm, to attract younger crowds... Now there's hypercasting, sending and receiving mini-video messages. Hypercasts can be organized by subject matter, time of year, different ways... What we're seeing is that the next generation is very video-focused. That's how they're used to getting and sending information."

Relevance, Perceived Value and Trust

Mr. Turicchi raises more important concerns: relevance, perceived value and trust.

"The difference between ages past and future ages is that the method of delivery has become as important as the content," says Mr. Turicchi. "So if your message is not visually appealing, it's not going to be heard! People are already getting their information this new way. People are used to getting information – secular information – in this new way.....This generation will give 'packaging' priority."

It is an important point for the Church. Those who can't imagine life without smart phones and video messaging will evaluate and judge the importance and value of all information, including the content and message itself, on the basis of the "package" in which they receive it.

"The Church has content. It has doctrine, teachings, the fullness of truth. That's the advantage," says Mr. Turicchi. "The game going forward, the challenge, is how to present this content in an attractive manner to a visual generation, and, how to make it accessible through varied means of connecting."

Stunted thinking process

The accessibility, speed and immediacy of digital communications does more than deliver content in an interactive way; it affects habits of rumination and critical thinking.

"In this age of new media, there is less critical thinking and more emotional, more reactionary thinking," Mr. Turicchi explains. "In 30 seconds you're told to donate, to buy this or that... It's a tiny window, measured in seconds, to elicit a response from you. It's impulse-driven. You can't do a lot of processing in 35 seconds! You have to make a fast, cursory evaluation and decision."

"You can't fight it," says Mr. Turicchi. "That's a loser. Maybe there are pockets of society that can stem the tide, but it's as much to their detriment as their benefit....so, how can the Church use this tool to disseminate its message? It has to take the core truths, the catechism, and break it down into 35 second messages...You might generate a better understanding of the catechism by pushing out 35-second messages—1,000 of them, delivered once a day, for 3 years—little drops each day!"

Information overload, where's the Church?

"People now expect to get information in real time," says Alan Napleton, CEO of Catholic Marketing Network, a trade association for Catholic retailers and suppliers. During the final days and hours of the national healthcare vote in Congress, Mr. Napleton set his Google Alert to pick up any news related to the issue at hand. In the heat of the final hours of battle, he hoped to get some real time perspective or analysis from a bishop. None came. Even though the final vote took place over a weekend and into late Sunday night—a time when most bishops and priests are especially busy—it was disappointing.

Mr. Napleton's disappointment was not for his own understanding of the issue. Rather, it was a disappointment at not seeing the wisdom of the Church injected into the real time moment of decision, so to speak.

"I wanted the Church to be there, at that moment," he says, even as he acknowledges that the bishops had already been clear and outspoken about their concerns with the proposed legislation. For Mr. Napleton, their statements weren't enough. He says simply: "They needed to have a real time presence."

This points to another serious concern for the Church. Authority.

There are, literally, millions of bloggers and citizen journalists posting opinions, analysis and more. A healthy number of these are commenting on Catholic issues and teachings. But where is the Church, speaking with her wisdom and authority? It creates a vacuum.

"If you have someone of authority blogging on a diocesan site," notes Mr. Turicchi, "then for example, instead of bloggers fueling rumors and speculation about who the next bishop might be, you can have a person of authority quell the rumors with a post that directs them to stop all the nonsense because the new bishop will be appointed and named in due time and it will happen when Rome decides. That's it."

The same holds true for matters of more eternal consequence. Anyone can get people to buy into their views with slick packaging, but many do not have informed consciences that enable them to accurately discern whether something is true or not.

"We're moving out of an age where Imprimatur works, that requires review," says Mr. Turicchi. "We're moving into real time. The Church's challenge is to make very clear what content is officially provided by the church and what is not approved. It's time for the bishops, the Church, to get in the game and be the authority, the leaders and shepherds, within this new media."

The Church has not been entirely out of the loop though. Kevin Perkins, CEO and co-founder of Skweezer, Inc., a company that provides mobile search and advertising solutions to network operators and publishers, points out that the entire Lectionary and Bible are online and that a site called "www.Ebreviary.com" has an online version of the Liturgy of the Hours and common prayers. Even the Vatican has its own iPhone app, giving people access to the Vatican library and resource. "It gives Catholics a way to reacquaint themselves with the gospel while waiting in a long Starbucks line," Mr. Perkins quips. "It's the world we live in—any moments of divine inspiration are positive."

Consequences of denial

On a local level, if potential and existing parishioners, or even out of town visitors, can't find accurate local parish information on the Internet, where will they go to find this information? The Yellow Pages are practically obsolete.

"Where am I getting local diocesan information? Where is it? What about my local parish? I'm still getting printed bulletins!" exclaims Mr. Turicchi. "All this information should be digital. A website is now considered standard operating procedure for business, yet a lot of parishes don't even have a website – that's shocking to me. If I'm traveling around and I want to find parish somewhere, I can't. MassTimes.org is helpful, but it doesn't have all the information I seek, and it's not likely to be as accurate as a local parish would be."

What is the likelihood that someone accustomed to searching for local businesses and citizen referrals (on sites such as Yelp.com) is going to take extra time to call a parish, wait for the receptionist or listen to a recorded message, in order to quickly find mass or confession times? Even more absurd, what is the likelihood that people will drive to every local parish within a 20-mile radius in order to retrieve this information?

Will these seekers miss mass, go elsewhere, or eventually lose interest all together because they consciously or sub-consciously come to expect that anything of value – anything worth knowing – is on the Internet. If it's not there, if church leadership isn't posting it there, then maybe it's not that important.

"There's a growing disconnect between what's expected and what is there," notes Mr. Turicchi. "It's ironic that the Vatican has a YouTube channel and Twitter accounts, while the local parish doesn't even have a website...What do most people care about more? The local level."

Citing Holy Week as a good example, Mr. Turicchi points out that if the schedule isn't posted on a parish website, and posted in a manner so that it can be easily viewed without having to download it, then a faithful Catholic has to drive by the local parishes to pick up a bulletin. In the age of real time communication, that puts parishes in the Stone Age.

"The Church at all levels has to find ways to embrace and adopt new communication technologies because it is the standard by which people will judge the relevancy of the local church and its content." says Mr. Turicchi.

The Pope Tweets...

Pope Benedict XVI has been at the forefront to further the banner of his predecessor, emphasizing and encouraging the ready embrace of the new tools of digital mass communications, and using these tools to win souls for Christ.

In March, the Vatican opened six Twitter accounts, one in each of six different languages. Vatican Radio and other Vatican media outlets will "tweet" important news.

Pope Benedict's chosen theme for the 44th World Communications Day, held on May 16, 2010, made the point unmistakably clear: "The Priest and Pastoral Ministry in a Digital World: New Media at the Service of the Word." It was a theme purposefully chosen to coincide with the Church's celebration of the Year for Priest.

In his message, the pope exhorted priests in particular to bring Christ into "cyberspace" likening it to the Lord walking the streets of our cities, knocking on the doors of our homes and hearts, inviting us to open the door and let Him in.

"All priests have as their primary duty the proclamation of Jesus Christ, the incarnate Word of God, and the communication of his saving grace in the sacraments...," the pope exhorts priests. "But how can they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how can they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how can they hear without someone to preach? And how can people preach unless they are sent?" (Rom 10:11, 13-15).

He continues: "Responding adequately to this challenge amid today's cultural shifts, to which young people are especially sensitive, necessarily involves using new communications technologies...Who better than a priest, as a man of God, can develop and put into practice, by his competence in current digital technology, a pastoral outreach capable of making God concretely present in today's world and presenting the religious wisdom of the past as a treasure which can inspire our efforts to live in the present with dignity while building a better future? ...To priests in particular the new media offer ever new and far-reaching pastoral possibilities..."

The USCCB announced radical communications changes in March, acknowledging: "We are in a paradigm shift in how people receive information, as profound as when the printing press was invented. It is important that the Church not only provide its wisdom regarding the primary dignity of the human person in this information evolution, but also take advantage of the opportunities this new media ecology provides."

"It's a wonderful time for ministry," exudes Mr. Perkins, himself a convert to the faith. "The scale of people to which the gospel can evangelize through new media tools would make Saint Paul marvel. One email, text message, Facebook post can literally be read by millions—all within a few nanoseconds. That's simply amazing!"

Don't do it alone

Perhaps the most important perspective for clergy to keep in mind as they venture into uncharted digital realms, is to lean on digital experts within their own parish and diocese, especially the young.

"I have people daily telling me they want to put their skills to work for the Church," says Mr. Napleton. "Faithful Catholic laity want to help their bishops and pastors get the message out, prudently analyze and respond in real time. There's a goldmine of these individuals in every diocese and parish across the country...They just need to have the door opened to help."

In a phrase immortalized by Nike and used frequently by Mr. Loarie in his work with multi-million dollar venture start-ups in the life sciences field, himself a tireless leader in his parish and diocese, "Just do it!" ◆

O Ancient Beauty Ever New

Thinking About Sacramental Architecture

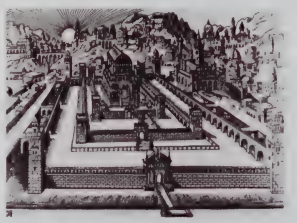
By Steven Schloeder, Ph.D.

The history of Catholic sacred architecture, at least for the first 1,900 years, concerned the question of how to express something quite beyond words, quite beyond any symbolic structure, quite beyond our imagination. "Eye has not seen, nor ear heard..." (1 Cor 2: 9) .

This immediately raises the question as to how immaterial reality – that is to say, spiritual things – can be conveyed to us who live our lives in the material world. We know the world outside of ourselves primarily through the senses and through rational thought (the creation of ratios or, parallel connections). Yet the very stuff of Catholicism is grounded in immateriality – in God and the heavenly realities. As the Church instructs us, "Church buildings are to be signs and symbols of heavenly things." (Sacrosanctum concilium, 122) How then does this occur?

1. The Trinity and All the Saints (Jean Fouquet) 15th cent.

Sacramental distinction



Perhaps the one great insight that distinguishes Catholicism (and the other apostolic Churches) from all other branches of Christianity and all other faiths is the sacramental principle. We as human beings – body and soul – come to God precisely through our humanity in a profoundly material world.

It is through the material world, and not in spite of the material world, that we connect with the spiritual realities. By God's design all of material creation is, to use the phrase of Dionysius the Areopagite, a theophany revealing God to us. It is through the material world that God gives us grace in a loving communion with His beloved: the physical bread and wine that feed and nourish us in the Body and Blood of Christ, the water that washes us physically and spiritually in Baptism, the gift of self in spousal love that is an objective participation in divine love in the sacrament of Matrimony. It is this sacramental insight that mandates our concern for the needy, in the words of Jesus: "Whatsoever you do to the least of my brothers, you have done to me." (Matthew 25: 40)

Throughout the scriptures we see that it is through the material world that we participate in the spiritual life. God speaks to humanity through both words and symbols: figures, dreams, language, law, directives, parables, analogies, metaphors, fantastical imagery, visionary language, liturgical arrangement and gestures, and so forth. God communicates to humanity in a manner apprehensible to humanity: through material things knowable to the senses: the dream of Jacob, the three visitors at the oak of Mamre, the burning bush, the pillar of fire and the ark in the desert tabernacle 2, the Glory of the Temple 3, and most perfectly in the Incarnation. Jesus himself then used parables and metaphors to explain the kingdom of God (itself a metaphor), and the writers of the New Testament developed a series of primal and interrelated metaphors to explain the ecclesia.

2. The Desert Tabernacle

3. The Temple of Solomon

Three core themes

While there are many images used to explain and understand our relationship to God in the Church (the mustard seed, the marital imagery, wine skins, the shepherd and his flock, etc), the three primary metaphors each concern the most fundamental and foundational experiences of the human condition: embodiment, dwelling, and community (Put simply: body, temple, and city).

These three themes are deeply interwoven. The body is a type of house—it is a house for the soul. The house is a shelter, a 'sanctuary' safe from the elements, animals, and marauders.

4 The Temple of Luxor (from Schwaller de Lubicz)

This human need for shelter precedes and even informs religion. Thus, the temple is a type of house, it is a house for the gods; and the primitive house was an intrinsically religious place dedicated to the family religion of ancestor worship. Archeological investigations show that the earliest temples, the Neolithic earth temples of Malta, symbolically express the woman's body, and Schwaller de Lubicz's works shows an uncanny parallel between the human skeleton and the ancient Egyptian temple. 4 It was with this deep yet now obscure understanding that Jesus could announce that his body was the true temple, and that St. Paul could liken the Body of Christ to the Church. 5 Similarly, the city is a house writ large, primitively as the house of the tribe, the 'body politic.' The king dwelt there, as did the gods. Primitive cities were often both palace-cities and temple-cities, such as Nineveh and Jerusalem. The church in this sense, is a city in which the true God dwells.

5 The Church as the Body of Christ (after Francesco Di Giorgio Martini) 16th cent.

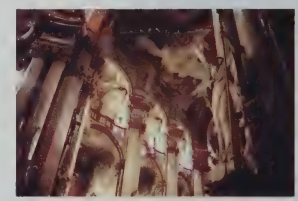
Loss and Recovery

This architectural vocabulary was largely discarded over the course of the 20th century. The loss, or rejection, of this language has coincided with a loss of meaning and vitality in church architecture. Churches of the past century tend to be austere and aniconic, expressive of a functionalistic approach to architecture that was seen in its time as an appropriate response to the Second Vatican Council in speaking to the men and women of that age. Without comment on the myriad of cultural forces that contributed to the loss of this language, it is worth noting that historical architectural styles, and the architectural forms that they engendered, have created the sense of "cultural memory" by which we understand "church" as a built form. Functionalism, which seeks to produce architecture through expressing the material functional relationships in the building, is not concerned with symbolical meaning, historical forms, commonly understood language, or formal typologies through which the "cultural memory" is transmitted and received.

This is why architectural functionalism, or its sister liturgical reductionism can serve neither the Catholic liturgy nor the church building as a sacramental sign. A merely algebraic approach to liturgical symbols guts them of their vitality. Sacramental symbols are perforce complex, multivalent, layered, and even at times ostensibly contradictory. Furthermore, the complexities of the human person and of the communal dynamics of the liturgy call for a richer architecture that engages us in the fullness of our being: body and soul, will and intellect, passions, appetites and emotions, senses, memory and imagination, our capacity for wonderment and delight and awe.

In short, this is a call for a return to, and a recovery of a rich, complex and symbolic architecture. It is not a stylistic question, as if building anew Gothic or neo Renaissance temples could adequately respond to the vision of the Second Vatican Council. Rather, it is a sacramental question: how to create contemporary churches that help us understand our true place in the Body of Christ, as "living stones" in the Temple of the Holy Spirit, and as dwellers in the Heavenly Jerusalem.

The current challenge



Typically today, parishes want "Catholic churches that look like Catholic churches." Yet simply designing neo Gothic churches, or dressing up centralized modernistic spaces in fancy neo Palladian ball gowns, cannot be the answer. The challenge for today's liturgical architects is how to communicate the meaning behind traditional architectural forms without merely aping those formal elements that constitute the "style."

Each architect will find his or her own expression of what this means; each project will suggest its own solution related to budget, region, architectural vernacular, site context, community expectations, demographics, program, and so forth.

The history of Catholic architecture shows that these central themes of body, temple and city have inflamed the imaginations of architects and builders in every age. Consider the imperial basilica in the patristic age 6, the image of the "city of glass" in the middle ages, the recovery of the Greco-Roman temple in the Renaissance, the image of the body and the expression of the Solomonic temple in the 18th century. Baroque, the fantastical churches of the Rococo age 7, even icons of modern architecture such as Perret's La-Raincy show the perdurance of these themes. 8

8 Notre-Dame-le-Raincy, Paris (copyright Steven J Schloeder)

However, these themes will always find contemporary expression. Simply put, we are no longer patristics, or medievals, or renaissance thinkers — both our experience of the world and our building materials, methods, and systems are contemporary. It is not that our architecture must reflect this reality, but that our architecture can only reflect this reality. Furthermore, there is no sense in which either the documents of the Second Vatican Council, or the insights of the mid 20th c. Liturgical Movement, can be responsibly understood as a call to return to the past per se, for its own sake. A retour aux sources certainly is a call to return to the theological underpinnings of the Liturgy from antiquity onward, but it is not a stylistic return.

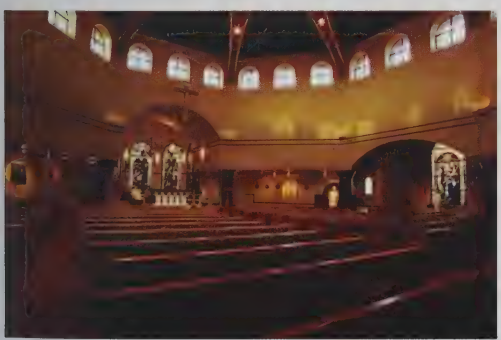
The question for today's liturgical architect is how best to express those ineffable relationships that were encoded in traditional architecture, quite apart from the matter of style. Those styles that formed the cultural memory of Catholic architecture are a rich trove of architectural sources from which to work, but it would be a mistake to focus on the matter of style and miss the underpinning theological ideas that the architects and builders of these styles sought to express.

Three Examples

These themes – body, temple, city – all of which seek to express some insight into the heavenly reality find fresh vitality in contemporary projects. At St. Therese in Collinsville OK, the combination of the parish's explicit desire to have "a Catholic church that looks like a Catholic church," the desire for an intimate building with a lateral plan, the budget, and rural location brought forth a design that had strong allusions to late patristic, early Romanesque northern Italian architecture. Themes of the heavenly Jerusalem are expressed in the twelve columns that define the nave and sanctuary and in the twenty-four clearstory windows that allude to the twenty-four elders around the throne in the book of Revelation. Images of the Body are explored in the Greek cross plan and the square –symbols of Christ – overlaid by the octagon which is a symbol of the resurrection. [10] The dedication to the Little Flower is subtly referenced in the 'Mystical Rose" formed at the intersection of the arches in the octagonal ceiling. The building was consecrated on the Feast of the Little Flower in the Jubilee Year, 1 October 2000.



In another, much larger project, the parish of Sts. Anne and Joachim in Fargo desired their new building to recall the local cultural memory of the Northern European Gothic churches that their forebears brought to the Great Plains in the 19th century. [11] Gothic architecture is in essence an expression of "the city of glass" (Revelation 21) and is renowned for the magnificent depictive stained glass, expansive spaces, and durable materiality. [12] The complex arrangement of forms which express clearly the various parts of the church –the great central nave, the monumental bell tower, the daily mass chapel, and the ambulatory with the various side chapels and confessionals – is an organic assemblage of parts that liken the building to the analogy of the body.

For the new Shrine of Our Lady of Guadalupe in La Crosse Wisconsin, Prof. Duncan Stroik employed his signature neo Palladian architecture to evoke the image of the church as the Temple of God. In the tradition of pilgrimage churches, the Shrine is located high upon a hill outside of the city with a campanile and dome which is visible from afar. 13 Since it is a place for prayer and pilgrimage, the Shrine is designed to accommodate flow and movement, with seating in the nave for the liturgy and large open side aisles for circulation and prayer. The dominant baldachin over the high altar 14 – reminiscent of the great patriarchal basilicas in Rome – alludes to the Tent of Dwelling (Exodus 25) which laid the foundation for all subsequent Jewish and Christian liturgical architecture.

These are just three examples of how contemporary church buildings can speak to the ineffable ideal of "heaven wedded to earth." While participating in some of the past architecture that constitute the body of cultural memory in the Catholic tradition, the stylistic allusions are ultimately secondary to the more significant sacramental meaning of the buildings.

The idea of church building as "signs and symbols of heavenly things" was largely lost in the middle of the last century. Yet these scriptural themes of the Ecclesia—body, temple and city — have perdured precisely because they are so essential to our comprehension of the human condition. In the history of Catholic architecture these themes have inflamed the imaginations of builders and architects across the ages. Today they can continue both to inspire contemporary architects and to move the hearts and minds of the faithful, responding to the growing desire to once again build churches that move beyond the functional, beyond the stylistic, to a truly sacramental architecture.

Pilgrimage, the Human Experience

By Chris Lowney

We humans have been journeying to holy places for over two millennia, and we will likely keep doing so as long as we walk this planet.

Why do we go?

The impulse to pilgrimage spans continents, cultures, and faiths. More than a million Hindus annually descend on Benares to bathe in the sacred Ganges. Some two million Muslims visit Mecca. Eight million pilgrims journey to Lourdes and another five million to Fatima. And millions more will head to shrines great and small, too numerous to count, on every inhabited continent.

At first glance, little seems to link these journeys. Our mind-bogglingly diverse religious traditions spur equally varied motivations for pilgrimage. Buddhists, for example, often visit Bodh Gaya, site of the Buddha's enlightenment, in search of their own illumination. Many Hindus hope that visits to their faith's Char Dham (four holy places) might liberate them from the cycle of rebirth. And Catholic visitors to Lourdes often seek healing for themselves or loved ones. What possibly connects the Buddhist serenely meditating under the Bodhi tree, the Catholic petitioning a cancer cure at Bernadette's grotto, and the Hindu seeking deliverance from the wheel of reincarnation?

Well, quite a lot. Underneath the surface concerns that propel pilgrims to holy places is the shared bedrock of human experience. Whatever we believe, wherever we live, and whenever in history we were born, perhaps we humans keep journeying as pilgrims because pilgrimage mirrors the reality of the human condition. Pilgrimage, like life, is a journey. And in pilgrimage, as often in life, we note some need and hope it can be addressed. Put differently, common human themes tie us pilgrims together:

- Desire: Something is missing; we know our world is not perfect; there is a problem to be solved, a need to be addressed.
- Hope: We hope for something better.
- Journey: Pilgrimage is ultimately a metaphor for life itself, a journey that is filled with desires and hopes.

Desire: Something is missing…

A few (too few) of us pilgrims set out simply to give thanks for all that we have. More likely, we set out for the opposite reason: we want or need something. We infirm need physical healing; we mentally anguished seek peace; we, the unreconciled want to patch up broken relationships with God, family, or friends. We are restless and feel like there must be more to life than the path we're following; we look for answers to some vexing life dilemma; we yearn for spiritual enlightenment or a deeper connection with our Creator; we are exhausted by modern's life's pace and simply crave a little peace; or we are simply bored and pursue the stimulation of something different. Our hearts are a little empty; our behavior is a little wanting; or our bodies are suffering.

Something is missing, however we express that. And so we set out. After all, why would we go anywhere if we lived in perfect bliss? Why would we search for something if we already had everything?

That is not to say—lest the foregoing seem too romantic—that what we search for, on pilgrimage or in life, is necessarily divinely inspired, lofty, noble, or saintly. Pilgrims journey for all sorts of reasons and look for all sorts of things. I once noticed a handsome, twenty-ish male squiring an equally attractive young female along a pilgrim route; a couple of days later I saw them again, she now hobbled by a sore knee; a week later I saw him yet again, miles further along the pilgrimage trail, this time accompanying a different young woman. I imagined the rogue shepherding his first pilgrim-date on a bus back home so that he could once again turn toward his pilgrim goal: finding another woman to accompany. So much for chivalry!

Still, whether our appetites are channeled in lofty or base ways, philosophers of religion find something profoundly spiritual in our insatiable wanting, our unquenchable sense of "something missing." That is, we humans are perennially unsettled because there is ultimately more to us than what we own, eat, earn, or possess; there is more to life than our jobs, homes, entertainments, or bank accounts. No matter what we have, how famous we become, what we earn, who we sleep with, or what we drive, we will always feel at least somewhat incomplete, vaguely dissatisfied, or wanting more.

Our wanting, the forever-restlessness of the human condition, signifies that we are innately geared for more than this earthly lifetime can ever offer, whether or not we ever recognize the fact or forever exhaust ourselves reeling unquenched from one pursuit to another. The fifth century bishop St. Augustine put it this way, "Our hearts are restless, O God, and they will not rest until they rest in Thee." Because we are restless, we are never quite at home here. The New Testament letter to the Hebrews proclaims that, "We are all strangers and exiles on the earth." [Hebrews 11:13] The sentiment is harshly worded. I don't feel an "exile" on this beautiful earth. But I don't feel utterly fulfilled either, and I don't suspect I ever will be. So we restless humans hit the road in search of the healing, enlightenment, answers, or experiences that might complete us, which brings us to the second great human impulse expressed through pilgrimage.

Hope: We indomitably hope for something better....

Every pilgrimage embodies hope. We hope to reach a destination and return home safely. But we also hope that our lives will be bettered through the pilgrim experience. We hope for peace, reconciliation, forgiveness, healing, enlightenment, or a dozen other aspirations. A woman at Lourdes hopes her sick child will be healed, and a Buddhist hopes he too will be enlightened after resting where the Buddha found insight.

I prayed one evening at a small town church during a week-long pilgrimage to Santiago de Compostela. The town was virtually depopulated, a relic of a bygone small-town past struggling to survive a present dominated by large commercial urban centers. Hundred-degree heat had transformed this under populated, dusty place into a ghost town. A handful of us dirty, bedraggled pilgrims straggled into the deserted town; had we been gunslingers on horseback skirting a tumbleweed or two, the scene could have passed for an old western movie.

As dusk fell, church bells tolled to announce the evening mass. Three or four old ladies emerged from shuttered houses and made their way to the same cool church where we pilgrims were resting. After mass, the priest prayed for the pilgrims' continued safety, then closed his prayer book and improvised, "I know you pilgrims are hot and tired, but keep going. If you are looking for answers, you will find answers. If you are looking for peace, you will find peace. If you are looking for God, God will find you." Yes, that's it, isn't it? That's what we humans do. We journey in hope. We hope for peace, answers, and second chances. And we don't give up hoping. We hope indomitably. No diagnosis of terminal illness prevents us from hoping that some miracle or medical breakthrough may yet save our beloved spouse or child. We seize on remarkable stories from our respective traditions, reminding ourselves, for example, of the Jesus who visits a death-struck young girl and says, "talitha cumi," "little girl, arise." And she does.

The Biblical patriarch Abraham is considered one of humanity's first great pilgrims, journeying at God's bidding toward a promised land. The letter to the Hebrews reflects on Abraham's long-wandering caravan and observes, "If they had been thinking of that land from which they gone out, they would have had opportunity to return. But, as it is, they desire a better country." [Hebrews 11: 15-16] Yes, we keep going, on our pilgrimage to Lourdes, Mecca, Benares, or Montserrat, or our pilgrimage through life. We hope for something better, and hope pulls us forward on our journey.

Journey: Our life is a journey, and pilgrimage is a metaphor...

Sometimes our hopes are fulfilled and sometimes they are not. Yet we keep going, and frequently we learn from the journey. In this respect, one's pilgrimage to Lourdes or Montserrat is a metaphor for life itself. Most pilgrims learn the truth of the old cliché: it's about the journey, not the destination. That isn't entirely true, of course: no journey will seem worthwhile if it ultimately leads to a meaningless, valueless destination (just ask anyone who late in life suffers regrets after orienting life around some goal that, once finally grasped, turned out to be empty and unfulfilling).

But in pilgrimage as in life, a lot of it is about the journey: who we meet along the way, what we see and savor, how we behave, what we learn, and dozens of other things that, in the end, constitute a life well lived or a pilgrimage well walked. No magic will happen simply by reaching a destination like Montserrat, any more than magic happens simply by reaching the company presidency or the comfortable retirement. More often, the magic happens along the way, and pilgrims through life will be wise to keep eyes, hearts, and minds open to what discoveries may await us along the way.

Trekking six or seven hours each day during one pilgrimage, I passed by other trekkers daily (or they bypassed me). Most of us exchanged only a "buen camino" and kept going, each happy in our own solitude. Sometimes we faced the awkward dilemma that we were walking at the same pace; would we remain silent companions for the next three or four hours, each mulling his thoughts accompanied by the soundtrack of the other's footfalls? Faced with the prospect, one might conveniently slow down or speed up a bit, or take an unneeded rest, in order to open up the literal and figurative space we each wanted.

But sometimes pilgrims wanted not space but companionship. After exchanging idle chatter about the weather and our respective home countries, travelers might quickly begin confiding intimate concerns. Some had mulled a quandary for a quiet hour or two and needed to share their insight or anguish with another person. Others were simply taking advantage of the "airline phenomenon" and unburdening themselves anonymously to a walking companion they would never meet again in "normal" life. Walking companions sometimes learn things that bosses, best friends, or lovers didn't know. A savvy young computer engineer walked and wondered if his life and career ought to concern something more than computer engineering. One woman mulled a marriage proposal. Another woman, already married, was resisting her husband's entreaties to start a family. Did her reluctance to have children now say something about her, she wondered? About their relationship? She hoped light would dawn in the five-hundred miles that gaped between her and the famous cathedral in Santiago.

As for me? Nothing like that. I love to walk; I love travel; I'm a religious person; I studied medieval history in college and relished the chance to see Spain's Romanesque and Gothic churches; I enjoy solitude and occasional refuge from the crazed drumbeat of meetings, phone calls, and emails that dominates modern life. Wasn't that reason enough to go on pilgrimage? I had neither a burning conundrum to resolve nor enlightenment to seek. For the first few days of my trek, I good naturedly shrugged aside the oft-repeated mantra that one hears regularly, "Everyone has something to learn on the camino."

But we all do have something to learn, and we more often learn it through the journey than at the destination. One German trekker emailed me after returning home from his trek, undertaken as a long-distance vacation hike, nothing more. He was in terrific shape. We had run into each other various times during the early days of our respective treks. I would arrive in town, sweaty and exhausted at the end of the walking day, to find him relaxing with a beer at some outdoor café; he had arrived two hours ahead of me, showered, washed his clothes and hung them to dry in the late afternoon sun.

After a few days, I didn't see him any more; I was still gutting out thirteen to fifteen miles each day (and grateful to do that much), but he had started pushing himself, ratcheting up his distances from thirteen to fifteen miles, then seventeen and still further. His email reported his safe arrival at Santiago and then back home in Germany, "I felt very good on the camino, my physical condition couldn't be better," he wrote, "Most times I had no problems to walk even long distances. I really enjoyed to see how far I could get, to go to my limits." But to his surprise, his vacation had yielded a challenging insight. Yes, he was exhilarated to push his physical limits and discover his fortitude. But as he walked, the anguishing realization dawned about his life back at home, "I rarely tap my full potential. Or, to say it in the camino way: I walk only 20 km although I could walk 35 km. Now I think it is very helpful to go to your limits from time to time. To feel my energy. For me there is a lot to discover." Everyone has something to learn.

I had my own unexpected thoughts along the way. First came profound solidarity with the millions of my fellow-Christian predecessors who had journeyed the same route over centuries. I particularly imagined the unremembered thousands who died during pilgrim journeys and lied buried in unmarked, makeshift graves along the route. That fact may shock modern minds, but consider that many medieval pilgrims would have been broken-down peasants, released from their feudal obligations for the trip of a lifetime only because they were no longer considered fit for productive labor. If a peasant died three-hundred miles from home in 1000AD, there were neither resources nor inclination to transport the body back home. I began to see myself as metaphorically completing the journey that they couldn't and bearing their hopes to Compostela.

Until that is, I needed someone to bear mine. 250 miles into a five-hundred mile journey, twenty pounds lighter than the day I started, feverish, suffering from chest congestion that required an antibiotic course, a blood-filled blister on one heel and a merely painful one on the other, I was whipped. I gave up. "No mas." I changed plane reservations from a pay phone in a small Spanish town, then took a bus to the nearest city. The bus briefly skirted the pilgrim trail, and I saw two or three trekkers pressing toward the goal I wouldn't reach. I had always understood that I might not complete the pilgrimage; all kinds of things can go wrong during a 500-mile walk; even minor problems like ingrown toenails can turn catastrophic. Yet, in my gut, I was certain I would finish. How could I not? I'm in good shape, had trained, packed the right gear, and prepared for most contingencies. That's who I am, the in-control guy who thinks ahead and gets the job done.

Except that, ultimately, I'm not in control. Everyone has something they have to learn on the camino, so the mantra goes. And, having blithely brushed the slogan aside during the early days of my pilgrimage, I was finally humbled and weakened enough to learn what I was supposed to: it's not my world; it's God's world. I re-learn that truth every couple of years, then slowly push it from consciousness and briefly begin living again as if I can control good health and ill, the vagaries of economies, and how others will choose to behave. But periodic jolts once again remind me that I'm not in control of as much of this world as I would like to believe.

I learned something else during my pilgrimage, at least before those blisters altered my perspective: the sheer joy of being alive. I trekked during early September, counting on an early turn to fall but punished by a late burst of summer. Temperatures climbed to the low hundreds by noon, day after day; so we pilgrims rose earlier and earlier, determined to conquer a chunk of the day's mileage in the pre-dawn cool. I left a pilgrim hostel at 4:30AM one morning, switched on my headlamp, and saw four or five headlamps already strung out ahead of me, bobbing slightly to each walker's particular rhythmic gait.

The file soon strung out as faster walkers out-paced slower ones, and I became a solitary dot of light under an ocean of stars. As we walked west, a dullish gray sky began pursuing us from the east and before long overtook the starry blackness. Then orange rays began warming my back and tinting countless stalks in a harvested grain field. The vague silhouette of a large hill loomed in the distance; over the hours, the hill grew closer (and larger), patches of green appeared, then a road, then trees and bushes. Hours later I stood atop that hill with the fierce sun directly overhead bleaching the colors of all around; I saw my destination for the evening down in the valley. I started down the other side of the hill. Time moves differently when you move slowly.

One Spanish pilgrim put it this way. He had worked in a city along the pilgrim route, and his daily auto commute bypassed one stretch of the camino. He sometimes saw a pilgrim or two as he cruised to work or lurched along in congested traffic. He recounted, "I used to wonder what those people were doing and why they were doing it." Once retired, he decided to walk the camino himself. Some days into his trek, he found himself walking the very same stretch of camino that he had bypassed thousands of times in his commuting lifetime. He stopped walking and beheld Spaniards whizzing by in their cars, a few of them undoubtedly commuting from the same suburb he once had to the same office district where he had once worked, "I looked at them all and I had to laugh to myself, because I found myself wondering what those people were doing and why they were doing it!"

Hit the road. Bring your hopes and questions. You will see some remarkable things as you go. And you will learn something. After all, everyone has something they have to learn on the camino. ◆

CHRIS LOWNEY, formerly a Jesuit seminarian for seven years, was named a Managing Director of J.P. Morgan & Co. while still in his thirties. He held senior positions in New York, Tokyo, Singapore and London until leaving the firm in 2001. He served successively on Morgan's Asia-Pacific, Europe, and Investment Banking Management Committees. Mr. Lowney undertook (but did not complete due to illness) a walking pilgrimage to Santiago de Compostela to raise money for charity. He is author of 3 books: Heroic Leadership (#1 best-seller of CBPA, finalist for 2003 Book of the Year Award from ForeWord magazine, translated into 10 languages), A Vanished World (nominated for La Coronica award), and Heroic Living.

CATHEDRAL OF SAINT CATHARINE OF SIENA · Allentown, PA

VERY REVEREND EDWIN CULLEN, BISHOP OF ALLENTOWN / REVEREND MONSIGNOR JOSEPH DESANTIS, LITURGICAL ARTS CONSULTANT

Often times it is a small commission which paves the way for a long-term relationship and multiple projects.

Such was the case for the last seven years spent at the Cathedral of Saint Catharine in Allentown. First, a new lighting system was designed and installed incorporating chandeliers original to the building erected in 1927 in the Colonial Revival style. Next, the sanctuary was expanded without the loss of congregational seating. The rear wall was sheathed with Venetian gold mosaic. Designs for the liturgical furnishings followed with modifications to the cathedra. A particularly elegant existing pilaster was replicated in solid bronze at a small family foundry in Italy and used in the design of the new ambo. Breccia Pernice was used to match the marble palette in the sanctuary.

Like every Rambusch project, the cathedral's renewed interior respects the character and design vocabulary of the building, all the while meeting the needs of current liturgical practice.

SAINT PETER'S CHURCH

NATIONAL SHRINE OF ST. JOHN NEUMANN (1811-1860) · Philadelphia, PA

REVEREND KEVIN MOLEY, C.Ss.R., PASTOR / REVEREND PATRICK WOODS, C.Ss.R., PROVINCIAL

Born in Bohemia, Neumann joined the Redemptorists in 1842 at the Church of Saint James in Baltimore. United States citizenship followed in 1848. In 1963, a heroic-sized banner, designed by Rambusch, was unfurled from the balcony above Saint Peter's Square in Rome proclaiming the first American citizen a saint.

His shrine draws pilgrims from all over the world and yet its lighting was not up adequate. The architecturally elaborate and complex interior was the subject of a detailed lighting study by Rambusch. Next came the physical mockups mounted in the church. Following design refinements, the actual equipment of architectural downlites, uplights, and accent lights were hand-built in the Rambusch workshops. After installation, the flexible lighting system was fine-tuned in place by Rambusch technicians. The worship space is renewed and revitalized by the custom lighting program accommodating the requirements of large liturgies, special pilgrimage events, as well as private prayer.

A provincial chapter conducts elections and handles legislation on a provincial level. The assembly is comprised of superiors and representatives of the religious.
A chapter of canons is a group of diocesan priests, appointed by the bishop of a diocese, with assigned authority or responsibilities.

College of Cardinals

The College of Cardinals is made up of the cardinals of the Church, who advise the Pope, assist in the central administration of the Church, head the various curial offices and congregations, administer the Holy See during a vacancy, and elect a new Pope. There are three ranks in the College of Cardinals, corresponding to the historical origins of cardinals in the Roman Catholic Church. All cardinals are bishops, but their rank within the College of Cardinals is characterized by one of the hierarchical ranks of bishop, priest, or deacon. Cardinals are given honorary title to churches in the city of Rome. [CF. c. 350; CLSA Comm., pp. 288-289]

1. Cardinal Bishops

There are two types of Cardinal Bishops: 1) those appointed by the Pope as titular bishops to one of the six suburban dioceses of Rome, and 2) Eastern-rite Patriarchs who are heads of Sees with apostolic origins that have been assigned to the College of Cardinals.

2. Cardinal Priests

Heads of Sees outside the city of Rome are assigned a "titular church," one of the churches in Rome. They have no pastoral authority over their titular church.

3. Cardinal Deacons

Cardinals of diaconal rank are bishops without Sees who head the various departments, offices, congregations, committees, and the Secretariat of State of the Roman Curia.

Confraternity of Christian Doctrine [CCD]

A lay organization established for religious education throughout a person's entire life. The term is currently used to describe Catholic parish-based religious education of children from kindergarten through high school. At the diocesan level, the offices are now more commonly known as offices of religious education or Christian formation. Nationally, the confraternity's religious education component has been taken over by the USCCB's Department of Education. It still exists as a separate entity under the USCCB Administrative Board, with responsibility for licensing religious and spiritual literature.

Consolidated School

The term, as used in the Directory, may refer to a school that takes students from more than one parish, or a school that was formed by the consolidation of two or three other schools. In both cases, it is a means of keeping a Catholic school in a given area open by taking students from the surrounding areas, regardless of parish boundaries.

In common usage, the term refers to a house of women religious. Originally, it referred to a building where members of religious institutes lived, and was not restricted to communities of women.

Cursillo

The cursillo de cristianidad, or "little course in Christianity," is a three-day program for achieving spiritual renewal or spiritual awakening. It seeks to convey a new sense of individual and organized apostolic action. The program, conducted by priests and laypeople, consists of a three-day weekend focused on prayer, study, and Christian action, and a follow-up program known as the post-cursillo.

Deacons
The diaconate is the first order or grade in ordained ministry. Its origins are in early apostolic times, when deacons preached and baptized under the direction of the presbyters or bishops. Any man who is to be ordained to the priesthood must first be ordained as a transitional deacon. Deacons serve in the ministry of liturgy, of the word, and of charity.

In 1967, Pope Paul VI reinstituted the Permanent Diaconate for men who do not plan to become ordained priests. Although men ordained as permanent deacons are sometimes referred to as "married deacons," the permanent diaconate is open to both married and unmarried men, with the understanding that after ordination, they may not marry even after the death of a spouse. Under the authority of the diocesan bishop, they perform the same functions as the transitional deacons while, at the same time, retaining their roles in society as family and business men.

Dean/Vicar Forane
The title of a priest appointed by the bishop to aid him in administering the parishes in a certain vicinity, called a "deanery," or "vicariates forane." Membership is also open to lay s. These prelatures are established to meet specific pastoral or missionary needs regional, national, or international level without infringing on the rights of the shops. A prelature is presided over by a personal prelate, who is an ordinary with ht to establish seminaries and ordain priests as members of the prelature.

law also allows for laity to be associated in the works of prelatures without withdrawn from the jurisdiction of their own diocesan bishop.

Personal prelatures are jurisdictional structures of a secular type which are established by the Holy See as an instrument within the hierarchical pastoral work of the Church to carry out special pastoral or missionary tasks. Personal prelatures are based on the principle of insertion into the local Church. In this they differ essentially from the personal dioceses, such as those constituted for the faithful of a particular rite, which are based on the principle of independence or autonomy in regard to local Churches.

Vatican II provided for setting up personal prelatures (see Decree, Presbyterorum ordinis, no. 10). Additional norms were established in subsequent pontifical legislation (see Motu proprio Ecclesiae Sanctae no. 1, no. 4, August 6, 1966 and the Apostolic Constitution Regimini Ecclesiae Universae, no. 49, no. 1, Aug. 15, 1967). General legislation concerning personal prelatures is contained in canons 294 to 297 of the 1983 Code of Canon Law.

Personal prelatures are to be established by the Holy See after hearing the views of the respective Episcopal Conferences (can. 294). They are governed by a Prelate according to statutes given by the Holy See. The Prelate is their proper Ordinary, who may incardinate priests and must look after their spiritual and temporal welfare (can. 295). Lay people can dedicate themselves by means of a contractual agreement, to the apostolic activities of the prelature; the statutes are to specify the manner of this organic cooperation (can. 296). And the statutes are also to determine the relations of the prelature with the Ordinaries of the places in which the prelature works, with the prior consent of the Ordinaries (can. 297).

Presbyteral Council

Also known as the priests' council, the presbyteral council is the principal consultative body mandated by the Code of Canon Law to advise the diocesan bishop in matters of pastoral governance. It consists of bishops and priests serving the diocese.

Propagation of the Faith

An organization, headquartered in Rome, which distributes aid to Catholic missions and organizes the work of missionaries all over the world. The organization has responsibility for fostering missionary vocations, assigning missionaries to field work, defining ecclesiastical boundaries and assigning clergy to them, and encouraging training and installation of native-born clergy.

Promoter of Justice

A cleric or lay person, holding a graduate degree in canon law, who is appointed by the diocesan bishop to serve in the role of a "prosecuting attorney" in trials of crimes against church law and of other judicial litigations in the diocese. A promoter of justice may be appointed for a specific case by the bishop.

Province

A defined geographic area containing an archdiocese, or Metropolitan See, and at least one diocese, or Suffragen See. The archbishop of the archdiocese has no direct powers over the Suffragen Sees, but does have limited advisory and appellate authority and obligations. The term also refers to a territorial grouping of particular churches or communities, or a territory of a religious order.

Provincial

The superior of the communities of a religious order that constitute a province.

Provincial Council

An assembly of the bishops of an ecclesiastical province, called by the metropolitan archbishop. The term is also used in reference to the provincial superior of a province, along with his or her chief advisors.

Receptions into the Church

Religious Priest/Diocesan Priest

Religious, or regular, priests are those who are professed members of a religious order or institute. Religious clergy live according to the rule of their respective orders. In pastoral ministry, they are under the jurisdiction of their local bishop, as well as the superiors of their order. Diocesan, or secular, priests are under the direction of their local bishop. They commit to serving their congregations and other institutions.

Retreat

A period of time spent in meditation and religious exercise. Retreats may take various forms, from traditional closed forms, to open retreats, which do not disengage the participants from day-to-day life. Both clergy and lay people of all ages participate in retreats. Houses and centers providing facilities for retreats are retreat houses.

Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults [RCIA]

The liturgical book containing the norms and rituals of the Catholic Church for people who wish to join the Church. Part of the book is intended for baptized Christians who wish to become Catholics. The term is used in a general sense to refer to the process of entering the Catholic Church.

Roman Curia

The official collective name for the administrative agencies and courts, and their officials, who assist the Pope in governing the Church. Members are appointed and granted authority by the Pope.

St. Vincent DePaul Society

Originally known as the Conference of Charity, this is an organization of lay people who serve the poor through spiritual and material works of mercy. The society operates stores, rehabilitation workshops, food centers, shelters, criminal justice and other programs.

Scholastic

A member of a religious order who has completed his novitiate, but has not yet been ordained.

Scholastic Teaching

Usually refers to Scholastic Philosophy, which is the basis for much Catholic Theology. It comes from the canonical "schools" of the 12th-13th centuries, St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Bonaventure, St. Albert the Great, etc., who developed "scholasticism" based mainly on Aristotle. It is the semi-official philosophy of the Church.

Secular Institute

Canonically erected institute of consecrated life for single laity and clerics who strive for the perfection of charity and work for the sanctification of the world while remaining in a lifestyle within the world.

See

The word is taken from the Latin word "sedes" ("seat"), and is used to denote a diocese or ecclesiastical district. The term Holy See is reserved to the diocese of Rome whose bishop is the Pope. U.S. Territorial Sees are dioceses located on territory of the United States of America, but are members of episcopal confereences other than the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Seminary

An educational institution for men preparing for Holy Orders. The term originates from the time of St. Augustine, when those preparing for the priesthood were educated in the "cathedral school." During the Middle Ages, the clergy were educated in a university setting where faculties of philosophy, theology, and canon law existed. Eventually individual dioceses or provinces came to establish their own schools for educating their clerical students. Traditional seminaries date from the Council of Trent in the 16th century.

A school for the spiritual, academic, and pastoral education and formation of priesthood candidates is known as a major seminary in which the focus is on philosophical and theological education. To prepare for entrance into a major seminary, a period of study is set aside for the required courses in the humanities and the sciences in institutions called minor seminaries.

Serra Club

Local units of Serra International, an organization which promotes vocations to the priesthood and religious life, and offers instruction to lay leaders.

Sister

The term, in the strictest sense, refers to women religious who belong to institutes which have professed simple vows. However, in everyday usage, the term is used for any woman religious.

Sodality

A group of laity established for the promotion of Christian life and worship, or some other religious purpose.

Special Centers for Social Services

This would seem to overlap with Specialized Homes. Some of the categorize fairly arbitrary. Catholic Charities might have its own proper distinctic government or private funding purposes.

Specialized Homes

Includes such institutions as homes for handicapped (e.g., Misericordia H youth homes (e.g., Maryville, Mercy Boys and Girls, Homes), homes for ba women, drug rehab centers, homes for unwed mothers, etc.

PART I

Hierarchy of the Catholic Church

The Hierarchy, as the supreme governing body of the Catholic Church, consists of the Roman Pontiff, the successor of Peter, and the Bishops joined together with him and never without him (canons 330,331,336) in one apostolic college to provide for the common good of the Church. The Roman Pontiff in the exercise of his office is assisted by the College of Cardinals, and further by the departments also called "dicasteries" of the Roman Curia. The Bishops, of whom some bear the titles of Patriarch and Archbishop, are united with the Roman Pontiff in the governance of the whole Church; the Bishops, when assigned to particular Sees, are individually responsible for the teaching, sanctification and governance of their particular Church. Apostolic Vicars and Prefects together with certain Abbots and other Prelates are also joined in this work.

HIS HOLINESS THE POPE

Bishop of Rome and Vicar of Jesus Christ,
Successor of St. Peter, Prince of the Apostles,
Supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church.
Primate of Italy.
Archbishop and Metropolitan of the Roman Province,
Sovereign of Vatican City State.
Servant of the Servants of God

Benedict XVI

JOSEPH RATZINGER

The present successor of St. Peter was born in Marktl am Inn, Diocese of Passau, April 16, 1927; ordained Priest, June 29, 1951; appointed Archbishop of Munchen und Freising March 25, 1977 and consecrated May 28, 1977; Proclaimed and created Cardinal June 27, 1977. Elected Pope, April 19, 2005; installed April 24, 2005.

VATICAN CITY

Vatican City is the smallest state in the world, occupying 108.7 acres, of which about one third is covered with buildings and is situated on the right side of the Tiber River. Vatican City has territory, population, and sovereignity. This territory, limited as it is, suffices to guarantee the spiritual and temporal independence needed for the exercise of the Holy See's spiritual mission. In 1870 the Kingdom of Italy seized all Vatican possessions which for several centuries had constituted the papal temporal domain. But even after 1870 the Holy See continued to regard itself as a separate entity in international law, and was recognized as such by numerous states with which it retained normal diplomatic relations. After long discussions the Holy See and the then Kingdom of Italy signed the Lateran Pacts on February 11, 1929, so that the complete and independent authority of the Vatican State was and is recognized by the Italian state.

The Sovereign of this small state is His Holiness, the Pope.

The government presently is administered by a Pontifical Commission of which His Eminence Edmund Casimir Cardinal Szoka is President.

THE COLLEGE OF CARDINALS

The Cardinals constitute a special college and they assist the Roman Pontiff collegially when they are called together to deal with questions of major importance; they do so individually when they assist the Pope especially in the daily care of the universal Church by means of the different offices which they perform (canons 349-350). The Cardinals who are under eighty years of age elect his successor.

The College of Cardinals is divided into three ranks: Cardinal-Bishops, Cardinal-Priests, and Cardinal-Deacons. The College of Cardinals, when complete formerly consisted of 70 members: 6 Cardinal Bishops, 50 Cardinal Priests and 14 Cardinal Deacons, but the late Pontiffs, Pope John XXIII and Pope Paul VI enlarged the College of Cardinals. At the moment the maximum number of Cardinal electors (those under 80 years of age) must not exceed 120.

The Cardinal Bishops (except the Patriarch-Cardinals of the Oriental Rites), have as Titular Sees the Suburban Sees of Rome, which are: Porto Santa Rufina, Albano, Palestrina, Sabina, Frascati, Velletri, Segni. The Cardinal Dean has united to his See the See of Ostia. The Cardinal Priests take their title from the Titular Churches to which they are appointed: the Cardinal Deacons are appointed to other Churches called Deaconries. The first Cardinal Bishop is Dean; the first Cardinal Priest is First Priest; and the first Cardinal Deacon is First Deacon of the Sacred College. The Dean has the right of ordaining the new Pope if he is not already a bishop; the First Deacon has the right of proclaiming him and investing him with the sacred Pallium. On the death of the Pontiff, the Cardinal Camerlengo has the Administration of the affairs of the Holy See.

Sometimes the Roman Pontiff promotes a person to the dignity of Cardinal but does not make public his name and keeps it in pectore. Upon the publication of his name, this Cardinal enjoys his right of precedence from the day on which his name was reserved in pectore by the Pope (cfr. Can. 351¶ 3).

The Roman Curia

resent norms regarding the Roman Curia were publicly announced June 28, 1988, in the Pastor Bonus - Constitutio Apostolica de Romana Curia, and published in A.A.S. CXX/1988, Commentarium Officiale; pp. 841-934. The Supreme Pontiff usually conducts business of the universal Church by means of the Roman Curia, which fulfills its ty in his name and by his authority for the good and the service of the Churches; it consists of the Secretariat of State or the Papal Secretariat, congregations, tribunals d other institutions, whose structure and competency are defined in special law (can. 360). The Roman curia is the complex of departments and institutes which assist e Roman Pontiff in the exercise of his supreme pastoral function for the good and service of the universal Church and of the particular churches, by which the unity of faith d communion of the people of God is strengthened and the mission is promoted which is proper to the Church in the world.

I. THE SECRETARIAT OF STATE TO HIS HOLINESS

The Secretariat of State

Secretariat of State is the dicastery of the Roman uria which works most closely with the Supreme ntiff in the exercise of his universal mission (Pas- Bonus, Art. 39). The Secretariat of State is pre- ded over by a Cardinal who assumes the title of ecretary of State. As the Pope's first Collaborator the governance of the universal Church, the Cardi- al Secretary of State is the one primarily respon- ble for the diplomatic and political activity of the oly See, in some circumstances representing the erson of the Supreme Pontiff himself.

Secretariat of State includes two sections, namely: e First Section that is headed by an Archbishop, e Substitute for General Affairs, assisted by a Prel- te, the Assessor for General Affairs; and the Second ection of the Secretariat of State headed by an rchbishop, the Secretary for Relations with States, ided by a Prelate, the Under-Secretary for Relations ith States, and assisted by Cardinals and Bishops.

etary of State: His Eminence Tarcisio Cardinal Bertone.

he name of department (dicasteria) is under- tood: the congregations, tribunals, councils and ffices, namely the Apostolic Camera, the Ad- inistration of the Patrimony of the Apostolic ee, and the Prefecture of Economic Affairs of he Holy See. The departments are juridically qual among themselves. Attached to the insti- utes of the Roman Curia are the Prefecture of he Papal Household and the Office of Liturgical Celebrations of the Supreme Pontiff.

he Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith proper function of the Congregation on the Doc- rine of the Faith is to promote and safeguard the octrine of faith and morals in the whole Catholic orld; therefore, those things belong to it which ouch this matter in any way. Fulfilling the function f promoting doctrine, it fosters studies in order that he understanding of the faith might grow and that a esponse can be prepared under the light of faith for ew questions arising from developments in science nd human culture. It is a help to bishops, whether ndividually or gathered in assemblies, in the exer- ise of the function by which they are constituted uthentic teachers and doctors of the faith as well as he office by which they are held to safeguard and romote the integrity of that faith. This Sacred Con- regation reproves doctrines opposed to the prin- iples of the faith after the interested Bishops of a region have been heard. It studies the books referred o it and, if necessary, reproves them after the au- hor has been heard and has had an opportunity to defend himself and after the Ordinary has been fore- warned. It also examines whatever concerns "the privilege of the faith" whether in law and in fact. It is competent to pass judgment on errors about the faith according to the norms of an ordinary process. It safeguards the dignity of the sacrament of Pen- ance. The Congregation proceeds administratively or judicially according to the nature of the question to be treated.

fect: His Eminence William J. Cardinal Levada.
retary: Most Rev. Luis Francisco Ladaria Ferrer, S.J.
ice: Piazza del S. Uffizio 11, 00193 Rome, Italy. Tel: 69.88.33.57; 69.88.34.13; Fax: 69.88.34.09.

The Congregation for the Oriental Churches is Congregation considers those matters, whether regarding persons or things, which touch on the East- ern Catholic Churches. It treats all questions which pertain either to persons, or to discipline, or to the rites of the Oriental Churches, even if they are mixed in that by the nature of the thing or of persons they involve Latins. Territories in which a major part of the Christians belong to Oriental rites are subject only to this Congregation. Even in Latin territories it carefully supervises the faithful of Oriental rites and provides as much as possible for their spiritual needs even by the establishment of their own hierar- chy if the number of faithful and circumstances re- quire this.

First Section: For General Affairs

In conformity with Arts. 41-44 of Pastor Bonus, the Section for General Affairs or the First Section is responsible for handling matters regarding the everyday service of the Supreme Pontiff, both in caring for the universal Church and in dealing with the dicasteries of the Roman Curia. It attends to the preparation of whatever documents the Holy Father entrusts to it. It enacts the provisions for appointments within the Roman Curia and keeps custody of the Lead Seal and the Fisherman's Ring. It regulates the duties and activity of the Holy See's Representatives, especially in relation to the local Churches. It attends to all that concerns the Embassies accredited to the Holy See. It supervises the Holy See's official communication agencies and is responsible for publishing the "Acta Apostolicae Sedis" and the "Annuario Pontificio".

Substitute: Most Rev. Archbishop Fernando Filoni.
Assessor: Rev. Msgr. Gabriele Giordano Caccia.
Office: Apostolic Palace, 00120 Vatican City State, Europe. Tel: 06.69.88.34.38 Fax: 06.69.88.50.88.

Second Section: For Relations with States

On the basis of Arts. 45-47 of Pastor Bonus, the Section for Relations with States or Second Section has the specific duty of attending to matters which involve civil governments. It has responsibility for the Holy See's diplomatic relations with States, including the establishing of Concordats or similar agreements; for the Holy See's presence in international organizations and conferences; in special circumstances, by order of the Supreme Pontiff and in consultation with the competent dicasteries of the Curia, provides for appointments to particular Churches, and for their establishment or modification; in close collaboration with the Congregation for Bishops, it attends to the appointment of Bishops in countries which have entered into treaties or agreements with the Holy See in accordance with the norms of international law.

Secretary: Most Rev. Archbishop Dominique Mamberti.
Under-Secretary: Rev. Monsignor Ettore Balestrero.

The Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments

This congregation does those things which pertain to the Apostolic See as to the moderation and promotion of the sacred liturgy, especially the sacraments, with due regard for the competence of the Congregation on Doctrine of the Faith. It fosters and safeguards the discipline of the sacraments, especially what pertains to their valid and licit celebration; moreover, it concedes favors and dispensations for matters which are not contained in the facilities of diocesan bishops in this line. It alone examines the non-consummation of a marriage and the presence of causes for the granting of a dispensation and everything connected with them. It has competence with regard to the obligations connected with major orders and it examines questions about the validity of sacred ordination.

Prefect: His Eminence Antonio Cardinal Canizares Llovera.
Secretary: Most Rev. Archbishop Joseph Augustine J. Di Noia, O.P.
Office: Piazza Pio XII 10, 00193 Rome, Italy..Tel: 69.88.43.16; Fax: 69.88.34.99.

The Congregation for the Causes of Saints

The Congregation for the Causes of Saints is competent in all matters which in any way pertain to the Beatification of Servants of God or to the Canonization of the Blessed or to the Preservation of Relics.

This Congregation is divided into three offices.

Prefect: Most Rev. Archbishop Angelo Amato, S.D.B.
Secretary: Rev. Msgr. Michele Di Ruberto.
Office: Piazza Pio XII 10, 00193 Rome, Italy. Tel: 011 39 06 69.88.42.47; Fax: 011 39 06 6988 1935.

The Congregation for Bishops

This congregation examines what pertains to the constitution and provision of particular churches as well as the exercise of the episcopal function in the Latin Church, except for the competence of the Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples. It belongs to the Congregation for Bishops to propose to the Roman Pontiff, for approval, the constitution of new dioceses, provinces and regions; to divide, unite and realign them after consulting the interested Episcopal Conferences; it deals also with the erection of the military ordinariates and, after consulting the Episcopal Conference, prelacies for special pastoral ministries for various regions or social groups. This Congregation provides also for the naming of bishops, apostolic administrators, coadjutors and auxiliaries of bishops, military and other vicars and prelates enjoying personal jurisdiction. It is competent for all things that have to do with bishops and publishes norms which, through the Episcopal Conference, provide for the more urgent needs of the faithful.

The Congregation for the Clergy

With due regard for the rights of bishops and their conferences, this congregation examines those things which concern priests and deacons of the secular clergy with regard to their persons, pastoral ministry, matters which are in support of the exercise of these things, and in all this provides opportune assistance to the bishops. The Congregation has many functions: studies, proposes and urges the means and aids by which priests strive for sanctity. This office also has charge of everything which concerns the work and discipline of the diocesan clergy. Particularly it promotes the preaching of the Word of God and the works of the apostolate and organization of catechesis, evaluates and approves pastoral and catechetical directories, fosters national and international Catechetical Congresses and indicates the opportune norms for religious instruction of children, young people and adults. The Congregation looks also to the preservation and administration of the temporal goods of the Church without prejudice to the other Congregations which have temporal goods committed to their vigilance.

The Catholic Church in the United States

The organizational structure of the Catholic Church in the United States consists of 33 Provinces with as many Archdioceses (Metropolitan Sees); 149 Suffragan Sees (Dioceses); The Military Archdiocese; four Eastern-Rite jurisdictions immediately subject to the Holy See in Rome. The Eparchies of St. Maron (Maronites), Newton (Melkites), St. Thomas the Apostle of Detroit (Chaldeans) and St. George Martyr of Canton, Ohio (Romanians), St. Thomas of Chicago of the Syro-Malabarians. Each of these jurisdictions is under the direction of an Archbishop and Bishop called an Ordinary, who has apostolic responsibility and authority for the pastoral service of the people in his care.

The structure includes the territorial episcopal conference known as the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. In and through this body, which is strictly ecclesiastical and has defined juridical authority, the Bishops exercise their collegiate pastorate over the Church in the entire country.

Related to the USCCB is the civil corporation and operational secretariat through which the Bishops, in cooperation with other members of the Church, act on a wider-than-ecclesiastical scale for the good of the Church and society in the United States.

The following is a list of the thirteen regions in the United States and provinces within those regions.

Region I: Includes the states of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. Provinces of Boston and Hartford; Eparchy of Stamford and Eparchy for Melkites.

Region II: Includes the state of New York. Province of New York and Eparchy of St. Maron.

Region III: Includes the states of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Provinces of Newark and Philadelphia; Archeparchy of Philadelphia, Ukrainian Archeparchy of Pittsburgh, Byzantine Eparchy of Passaic, and Eparchy of Our Lady of Nareg for Armenian Catholics.

Region IV: Includes the states of Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Virgin Islands, Virginia and West Virginia. Provinces of Baltimore, Washington, and the Military Archdiocese.

Region V: Includes the states of Alabama, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee. Provinces of Louisville, Mobile and New Orleans.

Region VI: Includes the states of Michigan and Ohio. Provinces of Cincinnati, Detroit; Eparchy of Parma, Apostolic Exarchate for Chaldeans, and Apostolic Exarchate for Romanians.

Region VII: Includes the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Provinces of Chicago, Indianapolis, Milwaukee; Eparchy of St. Nicholas in Chicago-Ukrainian.

Region VIII: Includes the states of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. Provinces of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Region IX: Includes the states of Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. Provinces of Dubuque, Kansas City in Kansas, Omaha and St. Louis.

Region X: Includes the states of Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas (excluding El Paso). Provinces of Galveston-Houston, Oklahoma City and San Antonio.

Region XI: Includes the states of California, Hawaii and Nevada. Provinces of Los Angeles and San Francisco (excluding Salt Lake City); Eparchy of Van Nuys.

Region XII: Includes the states of Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington. Provinces of Anchorage, Portland and Seattle.

Region XIII: Includes the states of Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado and Wyoming. Provinces of Denver, Santa Fe, part of San Francisco, Salt Lake City, and El Paso.

Region XIV: Includes the states of Georgia, North and South Carolina and Florida. Provinces of Atlanta and Miami.

United States Conference of Catholic Bishops

Address—3211 Fourth St., N.E., Washington, DC 20017-1194. Tel: 202-541-3000; Web Site: www.usccb.org.

The United States Conference of Catholic Bishops is a permanent institute composed of Catholic bishops of the United States of America in and through which the bishops exercise in a communal or collegial manner the pastoral mission entrusted to them by the Lord Jesus of sanctification, teaching, and leadership, especially by devising forms and methods of the apostolate suitably adapted to the circumstances of the times. Such exercise is intended to offer appropriate assistance to each bishop in fulfilling his particular ministry in the local Church, to effect a commonality of ministry addressed to the people of the United States of America, and to foster and express communion with the Church in other nations within the Church universal, under the leadership of its chief pastor, the Pope.

Catholic Relief Services is the official international humanitarian agency of the U.S. Catholic community. CRS alleviates suffering and provides assistance to people in need in more than 100 countries, without regard to race, religion or nationality.

CRS was founded in 1943 by the bishops of the United States to assist the poor and disadvantaged outside this country — helping people in need for 65 years.

CRS is efficient and effective directing more than 93 percent of the agency's expenditures directly to programs that benefit the poor overseas. Our agency touches more than 80 million lives, by addressing the root causes and effects of poverty, promoting human dignity, and helping to build more just and peaceful societies.

Our relief and development work is accomplished through programs of emergency response, HIV, health, agriculture, education, microfinance and peacebuilding.

We serve Catholics in the United States by inviting them to live out their faith as part of one human family.

Catholic Charities USA is a national network of more than 1,700 local Catholic Charities agencies and institutions that provide help and create hope for more than 7.8 million people a year regardless of their religious, social, or economic backgrounds.

For more than 280 years, local Catholic Charities agencies have been providing a wide range of vital services in their communities ranging from day care, adoption, and refugee resettlement to advocacy, counseling, and emergency food and housing. Today, the Catholic Charities network is made up of more than 62,000 staff and 243,000 volunteers. In addition, more than 6,100 individuals serve as volunteer members of local boards.

The National Office-Catholic Charities USA-was founded in 1910 as the National Conference of Catholic Charities by the Most Rev. Thomas J. Shahan and Rt. Rev. Msgr. William J. Kerby in cooperation with lay leaders of the Society of St. Vincent De Paul.

Catholic Charities USA provides its members a national voice, networking opportunities, training and technical assistance, program development, and financial support.

Catholic Charities USA has been commissioned by the U.S. Catholic bishops to represent the Catholic community in times of domestic disaster. Catholic Charities USA also provides disaster preparedness training to dioceses and agencies to mitigate the disruption of business and services consequent to natural disasters.

Catholic Charities USA's president represents North America before Caritas International-the international conference of Catholic Charities-maintaining contact with the Catholic Charities movement throughout the world.

Pope Benedict XVI has named Fr. Larry Synder, President of Catholic Charities USA, to the Dicastery of Cor Unum, which provides disaster-oriented relief in developing countries.

Publications: Charities USA, a quarterly membership magazine; an annual report; an annual survey of Catholic Charities services nationwide; and various publications on issues of concern to Catholic Charities agencies.

National Catholic Conference for Total Stewardship (NCCTS)

National Office, 300 Liguori Dr. Liguori, MO 63057-9998. Tel: 636-464-3666 Fax: 636-464-4717 Email: fanov@aol.com Archbishop John Francis Donoghue, D.D., Episcopal Moderator,G. William Sefton, Chm.,Rev. Francis A. Novak, C.Ss.R., Pres.,Adelaide Herrell, Sec.

The mission of the National Catholic Conference for Total Stewardship (NCCTS) is to initiate in dioceses and parishes the concept of total stewardship through a pastoral process called Celebrating Life as a Catholic Christian (CLCC). The concept joins the three basic elements of the bible: Evangelization, Discipleship and Service, and through the CLCC process presents them as a single unit not as separate apostolates. The process first updates active church-going Catholics in sound catechetics and eucharistic spirituality. At the same time the process prepares and motivates them to reach out to lapsed, non-regular church-going Catholics making person-to-person contact with them and with RCIA graduates. They join a Small Ecclesial Faith Community (SEFC) connected to the parish. Active parishoners in SEFC's constitute a welcoming environment for those in need of returning to the faith and those in need of retaining it. In them they experience Catholic fellowship, inter-personal sharing, communal and personal prayer and study official church teachings. Through the CLCC process returnees and recent converts are further formed in doctrine and spirituality for full membership in the Church, for encountering Christ in the sacraments, for enjoying "communion" with all Catholics and for Celebrating Life as Catholic Christians both in vocation and mission.

Through its annual conference, Stewardship and Development Institutes, publications and audio materials, ICSC allows people committed to Christian stewardship to gather, share ideas, and learn from each other. At one with the universal church, ICSC fosters solidarity of stewardship as a way of life in parishes and dioceses all over the world. Membership in ICSC is extended to several categories of Christian stewards: (Arch)dioceses, parishes, Catholic associations and professional firms from the United States and around the world. Members receive a number of essential benefits to enable them to live stewardship and bring this way of life to others in their communities and organizations.

ICSC encourages the growing professionalism of diocesan stewardship and development procedures and programs, as well as the development of parish-centered stewardship renewal aimed at increasing the time, talent and treasure contributed by parishioners. These principles of stewardship outlined in the 1992 USCCB Pastoral Letter: Stewardship: A Disciple's Response.
